PROPOSED REGULATION OF THE

STATE BOARD OF PHARMACY

LCB File No. R007-21

February 28, 2022

EXPLANATION – Matter in italics is new; matter in brackets [~~omitted material~~] is material to be omitted.

AUTHORITY: §§1-3, NRS 639.070.

A REGULATION relating to pharmacy; establishing the requirements for an oncology group practice to obtain a certificate of registration from the State Board of Pharmacy to maintain a single inventory of dangerous drugs received at a site of practice; prescribing the procedure for renewing such a certificate; prescribing certain powers and duties of the dispensing practitioners of such a registered oncology group practice; and providing other matters properly relating thereto.

Legislative Counsel's Digest:

Existing law authorizes an exclusive list of persons, including practitioners, to possess and administer a dangerous drug in this State. (NRS 454.213) Existing law authorizes the State Board of Pharmacy to adopt regulations governing the dispensing of poisons, drugs, chemicals and medicines. (NRS 639.070) Section 2 of this regulation defines "oncology group practice" to mean two or more dispensing practitioners who practice oncology in a group practice. Section 1 of this regulation requires such a practice that wishes to maintain a single inventory of dangerous drugs received at a site of practice in lieu of maintaining separate inventories for each dispensing practitioner of the practice to apply to the Board for a certificate of registration and submit the applicable fee. Section 1 provides that the Board will issue a certificate of registration to an oncology group practice upon receipt of a completed application and fee. Section 1 provides that a certificate: (1) entitles the oncology group practice to maintain a single inventory of dangerous drugs at the site of practice for which the oncology group practice received certification; (2) is a revocable privilege; and (3) is valid for 2 years after the date on which the certificate is issued. Section 1 additionally prescribes the procedure for renewing such a certificate and requires an oncology group practice registered with the Board to notify the Board of the addition or removal of a dispensing practitioner of the practice.

Existing regulations require a practitioner who wishes to dispense dangerous drugs to obtain a certificate of registration from the Board. (NAC 639.742) Existing regulations require a practitioner who is registered with the Board to perform certain duties concerning dispensing of dangerous drugs. (NAC 639.742, 639.745) Section 1: (1) authorizes a dispensing practitioner of an oncology group practice registered with the Board to dispense any dangerous drug accounted for in the inventory of the oncology group practice; and (2) requires such a dispensing practitioner to maintain separate records of each dangerous drug dispensed by him or her.

Section 3 of this regulation provides that the dispensing practitioners of an oncology group practice registered with the Board are jointly responsible for ensuring compliance with certain requirements relating to dispensing dangerous drugs.

Section 1. Chapter 639 of NAC is hereby amended by adding thereto a new section to read as follows:

1. An oncology group practice that wishes to maintain a single inventory of dangerous drugs received at a site of practice in lieu of maintaining separate inventories for each dispensing practitioner of the oncology group practice must apply to the Board on an application provided by the Board for a certificate of registration and submit the fee prescribed in NAC 639.220 for authorization of a practitioner, other than a licensed veterinarian, to dispense dangerous drugs. An oncology group practice must submit a separate application and fee for each site of practice at which the oncology group practice wishes to maintain a single inventory of dangerous drugs.

2. Upon receipt of a completed application and fee, the Board will issue a certificate of registration to an oncology group practice. A certificate of registration is valid for 2 years after the date on which the certificate is issued by the Board, unless an oncology group practice renews its registration.

3. To renew a certificate of registration, an oncology group practice must submit to the Board another completed application and the fee prescribed in NAC 639.220 for biennial renewal of authorization of a practitioner, other than a licensed veterinarian, to dispense dangerous drugs.

4. A certificate of registration issued pursuant to this section:

(a) Entitles the oncology group practice to maintain a single inventory of dangerous drugs at the site of practice for which the oncology group practice received certification.

(b) Is a revocable privilege, and no holder of such a certificate of registration acquires any vested right therein or thereunder.

5. An oncology group practice registered pursuant to this section shall provide written notice to the Board of the addition to or removal of a dispensing practitioner from the oncology group practice not later than 15 days after the addition or removal, as applicable.

6. A dispensing practitioner of an oncology group practice registered pursuant to this section:

(a) May dispense any dangerous drug accounted for in the single inventory of the oncology group practice.

(b) Shall ensure that he or she complies with the requirements prescribed by NAC 639.745, including, without limitation, maintaining separate records of each dangerous drug dispensed by him or her.

Except as otherwise provided in NAC 639.7423, a practitioner who wishes to dispense controlled substances or dangerous drugs, or both, for human consumption must apply to the Board on an application provided by the Board for a certificate of registration to dispense controlled substances or dangerous drugs. A practitioner must submit a separate application for each site of practice, including, without limitation, a telepharmacy, remote site or satellite consultation site, from which the practitioner wishes to dispense controlled substances or dangerous drugs, or both, for human consumption. A certificate of registration to dispense controlled substances or dangerous drugs, or both, for human consumption is a revocable privilege, and no holder of such a certificate of registration acquires any vested right therein or thereunder.

2. Except as otherwise provided in NAC 639.7423, and section 3 of LCB File No. R004-19, if a facility from which the practitioner intends to dispense dangerous drugs or controlled substances, or both, for human consumption is not wholly owned and operated by the practitioner, the owner or owners of the facility must also submit an application to the Board on a form provided by the Board.

3. Except as otherwise provided in this section and NRS 639.23277 and NAC 639.395, 639.648 and 639.7423, the dispensing practitioner and, if applicable, the owner or owners of the facility and any federally-qualified health center vehicle, shall ensure that:

(a) All drugs are ordered by the dispensing practitioner;

(b) All drugs are received and accounted for by the dispensing practitioner;

(c) All drugs are stored in a secure, locked room or cabinet to which the dispensing practitioner has the only key or lock combination;

(d) All drugs are dispensed in accordance with NAC 639.745;

(e) No prescription is dispensed to a patient unless the dispensing practitioner is on-site at the facility or federally-qualified health center vehicle, as applicable;

(f) All drugs are dispensed only to the patient personally at the facility or federally-qualified health center vehicle, as applicable;

(g) The price of each drug dispensed to a patient is separately itemized on any bill or statement provided to the patient;

(h) All drugs are dispensed only for medically necessary purposes and according to prevailing standards of care for practitioners practicing in the specialty claimed or practiced by the dispensing practitioner; and

(i) The certificate for each dispensing technician employed at the facility is displayed in the room or cabinet in which drugs are stored.

4. Except as otherwise provided in NAC 639.648 and 639.7423, with regard to the filling and dispensing of a prescription at a facility, only the dispensing practitioner or a dispensing technician may:

(a) Enter the room or cabinet in which drugs are stored;

(b) Remove drugs from stock;

(c) Count, pour or reconstitute drugs;

(d) Place drugs into containers;

(e) Produce and affix appropriate labels to containers that contain or will contain drugs;

(f) Fill containers for later use in dispensing drugs; or

(g) Package or repackage drugs.

5. Except as otherwise provided in NAC 639.7423, a dispensing practitioner may compound drug products if he or she complies with the provisions of NAC 639.661 to 639.690, inclusive, as if:

(a) He or she were a pharmacist;

(b) His or her practice site was a pharmacy; and

(c) Any dispensing technician involved in the compounding was a pharmaceutical technician.

6. Except as otherwise provided in subsection 6 of section 1 of this regulation, the dispensing practitioners of an oncology group practice registered pursuant to section 1 of this regulation are jointly responsible for ensuring that the requirements prescribed by subsection 3 are met.

Section 3 of this regulation provides that the dispensing practitioners of an oncology group practice registered with the Board are jointly responsible for ensuring compliance with certain requirements relating to dispensing dangerous drugs.

Section 1. Chapter 639 of NAC is hereby amended by adding thereto a new section to read as follows:

1. An oncology group practice that wishes to maintain a single inventory of dangerous drugs received at a site of practice in lieu of maintaining separate inventories for each dispensing practitioner of the oncology group practice must apply to the Board on an application provided by the Board for a certificate of registration and submit the fee prescribed in NAC 639.220 for authorization of a practitioner, other than a licensed veterinarian, to dispense dangerous drugs. An oncology group practice must submit a separate application and fee for each site of practice at which the oncology group practice wishes to maintain a single inventory of dangerous drugs.
2. ~~[Upon receipt of a completed application and fee, the]~~ The Board will issue a certificate of registration to an oncology group practice if the application for a certificate of registration is approved and the requisite fee is paid. ~~[A certificate of registration is valid for 2 years after the date on which the certificate is issued by the Board, unless an oncology group practice renews its registration.]~~
3. To renew a certificate of registration, an oncology group practice must submit to the Board another completed application and the fee prescribed in NAC 639.220 for biennial renewal of authorization of a practitioner, other than a licensed veterinarian, to dispense dangerous drugs.
4. A certificate of registration issued pursuant to this section:

(a) Entitles the oncology group practice to maintain a single inventory of dangerous drugs at the site of practice for which the oncology group practice received certification.

February 24, 2022

EXPLANATION – Matter in italics is new; matter in brackets [~~omitted material~~] is material to be omitted.

AUTHORITY: § 1, NRS 639.070 and section 1 of Assembly Bill No. 177, chapter 184, Statutes of Nevada 2021, at page 861 (NRS 639.28013).

Legislative Counsel's Digest:

Existing law authorizes the State Board of Pharmacy to regulate the practice of pharmacy, including the sale and dispensing of drugs. (NRS 639.070) Existing law sets forth requirements for labeling containers for prescription drugs, including a requirement that each pharmacy, except for an institutional pharmacy, provide the directions for use on the label or other device affixed to the container for the prescription drug in English and, upon the request of a prescribing practitioner, patient or authorized representative of a patient, any language prescribed by regulations adopted by the Board. (Section 1 of Assembly Bill No. 177, chapter 184, Statutes of Nevada 2021, at page 861 (NRS 639.28013)) This regulation requires the directions for use on the label or other device affixed to the container for the prescription drug to be provided, upon the request of the prescribing practitioner, a patient or an authorized representative of a patient, at the time the prescription drug is dispensed, in both English and Spanish, Tagalog, Chinese, Amharic, Somali, Vietnamese or Korean. If information in the additional requested language does not fit on the label or other device affixed to the container for the prescription drug, this regulation requires it to be provided in a document provided to the patient or his or her authorized representative at the time the prescription drug is dispensed. Finally, this regulation provides that after the tabulations of population are reported by the Secretary of Commerce for each decennial census conducted by the Bureau of the Census of the United States Department of Commerce, the Board will: (1) review the demographic trends and projections of this State; and (2) if the Board determines that the list of languages set forth in this regulation must be updated, adopt a regulation to update that list within 120 days after its determination.

2. If the information required by subsection 6 of NRS 639.2801 is required to be provided in a language listed in subsection 1, other than English, and the information does not fit on the label or other device which is affixed to the container in which the prescription is dispensed:

(a) The information must be provided in a document that is provided to the patient or an authorized representative of the patient at the time the prescription is dispensed alongside the prescribed drug; and

(b) In addition to complying with the requirements of NAC 639.707 and 639.708, the pharmacist must inform the patient or authorized representative of the patient of the information provided pursuant to paragraph (a).

3. As soon as practicable after the tabulations of population are reported by the Secretary of Commerce for a decennial census conducted by the Bureau of the Census of the United States Department of Commerce, the Board will review demographic trends and projections of this State. If the Board determines that the languages listed in subsection 1 must be updated, the Board will adopt a regulation to update the languages listed in subsection 1 within 120 days after its determination.

2. The Board shall not include any nonnarcotic substance on any schedule if that substance is in a form suitable for final dosage and has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration for sale over the counter without a prescription, unless the Board affirmatively finds that:

(a) The substance itself or one or more of its active ingredients is an immediate precursor of a controlled substance; and

(b) The substance is materially misbranded or mislabeled, or the public interest requires the scheduling of the substance as a controlled substance in schedule I, II, III or IV.

3. In determining whether the public interest requires the scheduling of the substance, the Board shall consider:

(a) Whether the customary methods of marketing and distributing the substance are likely to lead to its unlawful distribution or use, including any relevant information with regard to a manufacturer or distributor of the substance concerning:

(1) His or her record of compliance with applicable federal, state and local statutes, ordinances and regulations;

(2) His or her past experience in the manufacture and distribution of controlled substances, and the existence in his or her establishment of effective controls against the unlawful distribution or use of the substance;

4. In determining whether a substance is misbranded or mislabeled, the Board shall consider the requirements of the federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and the Code of Federal Regulations concerning indications for its use and any advertising for a use not so indicated.

(Added to NRS by 1991, 1645)

NRS 453.2188 Placement of substance in schedule allowed if controlled by federal law pursuant to international treaty, convention or protocol. The Board may place a substance in schedule I, II, III, IV or V without making the findings respectively required for those schedules if the substance is controlled under the corresponding schedule of the federal Controlled Substances Act by a federal agency as the result of an international treaty, convention or protocol.

(Added to NRS by 1991, 1646)

NRS 453.219 Controlled substance analog: Treatment as substance in schedule I; notice of prosecution; determination by Board. A controlled substance analog, to the extent intended for human consumption, must be treated, for the purposes of NRS 453.011 to 453.552, inclusive, as a substance included in schedule I. Within 30 days after the initiation of prosecution with respect to a controlled substance analog by indictment or information, the district attorney shall notify the Board of information relevant to scheduling by extraordinary regulation as provided for in NRS 453.2184. If the Board finally determines that the controlled substance analog should not be scheduled, no prosecution relating to that substance as a controlled substance analog may be commenced or continued.

Kratom

WHAT IS KRATOM?

Kratom is a tropical tree native to Southeast Asia. Consumption of its leaves produces both stimulant effects (in low doses) and sedative effects (in high doses), and can lead to psychotic symptoms, and psychological and physiological dependence. Kratom leaves contain two major psychoactive ingredients (mitragynine and 7-hydroxymytragynine). These leaves are crushed and then smoked, brewed with tea, or placed into gel capsules. Kratom has a long history of use in Southeast Asia, where it is commonly known as thang, kakuam, thom, ketum, and biak. In the U.S., the abuse of kratom has increased markedly in recent years.

Kratom tree

How is it abused?

Mostly abused by oral ingestion in the form of a tablet, capsule, or extract. Kratom leaves may also be dried or powdered and ingested as a tea, or the kratom leaf may be chewed.

Leaf of kratom tree

What are the effects?

At low doses, kratom produces stimulant effects with users reporting increased alertness, physical energy, and talkativeness. At high doses, users experience sedative effects. Kratom consumption can lead to addiction.

Several cases of psychosis resulting from use of kratom have been reported, where individuals addicted to kratom exhibited psychotic symptoms, including hallucinations, delusion, and confusion.

Kratom capsules

What does it do to the body?

Kratom's effects on the body include nausea, itching, sweating, dry mouth, constipation, increased urination, tachycardia, vomiting, drowsiness, and loss of appetite. Users of kratom have also experienced anorexia, weight loss, insomnia, hepatotoxicity, seizure, and hallucinations.

What is its legal status?

Kratom is not controlled under the Controlled Substances Act; however, there may be some state regulations or prohibitions against the possession and use of kratom. The FDA has not approved Kratom for any medical use. In addition, DEA has listed kratom as a Drug and Chemical of Concern.

FDA NEWS RELEASE

FDA issues warnings to companies selling illegal, unapproved kratom drug products marketed for opioid cessation, pain treatment and other medical uses

More Press Announcements (/news-events/newsroom/press-announcements)

For Immediate Release:
June 25, 2019

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration issued warning letters (/inspections-compliance-enforcement-and-criminal-investigations/compliance-actions-and-activities/warning-letters) to two marketers and distributors of kratom products – Cali Botanicals (/inspections-compliance-enforcement-and-criminal-investigations/warning-letters/cali-botanicals-llc-575320-06112019) of Folsom, California, and Kratom NC (/inspections-compliance-enforcement-and-criminal-investigations/warning-letters/kratomnc-576964-05162019) of Wilmington, North Carolina – for illegally selling unapproved, misbranded kratom-containing drug products with unproven claims about their ability to treat or cure opioid addiction and withdrawal symptoms. The companies also make claims about treating pain, as well as other medical conditions like depression, anxiety and cancer.

"We have issued numerous warnings about the serious risks associated with the use of kratom, including warnings about the contamination of kratom products with high rates of salmonella that put people using kratom products at risk, and resulted in numerous illnesses and recalls. As part of our efforts to assess kratom for contamination in the products tested, we also found high levels of heavy metals in kratom products. Despite our warnings, companies continue to sell this dangerous product and make deceptive medical claims that are not backed by science or any reliable scientific evidence," said Acting FDA Commissioner Ned Sharpless, M.D. "As we work to combat the opioid crisis, we cannot allow unscrupulous vendors to take advantage of consumers by selling products with unsubstantiated claims that they can treat opioid addiction or alleviate other medical conditions."

The FDA continues to warn consumers not to use Mitragyna speciosa (/news-events/public-health-focus/fda-and-kratom), commonly known as kratom, a plant that grows naturally in Thailand, Malaysia, Indonesia and Papua New Guinea. Kratom is not legally marketed in the United States as a drug or dietary supplement, and while it is important to gather more evidence, data suggest that certain substances in kratom have opioid properties that expose users to the risks of addiction, abuse and dependence. There are no FDA-approved uses for kratom, and the agency has received concerning reports about the safety of kratom. The FDA is actively evaluating available scientific information on this issue and continues to warn consumers not to use any products labeled as containing the botanical substance kratom or its psychoactive compounds, mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine. The FDA encourages more research to better understand kratom's safety profile, including the use of kratom combined with other drugs.

The companies receiving warning letters use websites and social media to illegally market kratom products, making unproven claims about the ability of the kratom drug products they distribute to cure, treat or prevent disease. Examples of claims being made by these companies include:

- "Kratom acts as a μ-opioid receptor-like morphine."
- "In fact many people use kratom to overcome opiate addiction."
- "Of course, people who are using kratom to overcome a preexisting opiate addiction may need to use kratom daily to avoid opiate withdrawal."
- "Usage: It is for the management of chronic pain, as well as recreationally."
- "Kratom is frequently used as a natural alternative to treat depression, anxiety, addiction, diabetes, chronic pain and fatigue…Kratom has been reported to have taken the place of brand name drugs like Hydrocodone or Oxycodone for individuals, all the way to weaning people off of Heroin."
- "Some researchers have even claimed that kratom can protect you against cancer!"
- "Kratom is used for energy, to increase attention/focus, to relax, and also to treat pain and addiction. Here is just some of what our customers have used kratom to treat . . . Chronic Pain, Migraines, Opiate Addiction, ADHD/ADD, Anxiety, Depression, Arthritis, Insomnia and much more!"

Health fraud scams like these can pose serious health risks. These products have not been demonstrated to be safe or effective for any use and may keep some patients from seeking appropriate, FDA-approved therapies. Selling these unapproved products with claims that they can treat opioid addiction and withdrawal and other serious medical conditions is a violation of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

The FDA requested responses from both companies within 15 working days. The companies are directed to inform the agency of the specific actions taken to address each of the agency's concerns. The warning letters also state that failure to correct violations may result in law enforcement action such as seizure or injunction.

Reducing the number of Americans who are addicted to opioids and cutting the rate of new addiction is one of the FDA's highest priorities. This work includes promoting more widespread innovation and access to opioid addiction treatments for the more than 2 million of Americans with an opioid use disorder (https://www.samhsa.gov/data/sites/default/files/NSDUH-FFR1-2016/NSDUH-FFR1-2016.htm). The FDA is taking new steps to make safe and effective medication assisted treatments (MAT) available to those who suffer from opioid use disorder and to reduce the stigma that is sometimes associated with use of these therapies. Using products with unsubstantiated claims may prevent those addicted to opioids from seeking treatments that have been demonstrated to be safe and effective. Reliance on products with unsubstantiated claims may delay their path to recovery and put them at greater risk of addiction, overdose and death. In fact, patients receiving FDA-approved MAT cut their risk of death in half, according to the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration.

Health care professionals and consumers are encouraged to report any adverse events related to these products to the FDA's MedWatch (/safety/medwatch-fda-safety-information-and-adverse-event-reporting-program) Adverse Event Reporting program. To file a report, use the MedWatch Online Voluntary Reporting Form (https://www.accessdata.fda.gov/scripts/medwatch/index.cfm?action=reporting.home). The completed form (/safety/medical-product-safety-information/medwatch-forms-fda-safety-reporting) can be submitted online or via fax to 800-FDA-0178.

The FDA, an agency within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, protects the public health by assuring the safety, effectiveness, and security of human and veterinary drugs, vaccines and other biological products for human use, and medical devices. The agency also is responsible for the safety and security of our nation's food supply, cosmetics, dietary supplements, products that give off electronic radiation, and for regulating tobacco products.

FDA STATEMENT

Statement from FDA Commissioner Scott Gottlieb, M.D., on the agency's scientific evidence on the presence of opioid compounds in kratom, underscoring its potential for abuse

More Press Announcements (/news-events/newsroom/press-announcements)

For Immediate Release:
February 06, 2018
Statement From:

Over the past several months, there have been many questions raised about the botanical substance known as kratom. Our concerns related to this product, and the actions we've taken, are rooted in sound science and are in the interest of protecting public health. However, we recognize that there is still much that is unknown about kratom, which is why we've taken some significant steps to advance the scientific understanding of this product and how it works in the body. Today, we're providing details of some of the important scientific tools, data and research that have contributed to the FDA's concerns about kratom's potential for abuse, addiction, and serious health consequences; including death.

Notably, we recently conducted a novel scientific analysis using a computational model developed by agency scientists, which provided even stronger evidence of kratom compounds' opioid properties. These kinds of models have become an advanced, common and reliable tool for understanding the behavior of drugs in the body. We also have learned more about deaths that involved kratom use, and have identified additional adverse events related to this product. This new data adds to our body of substantial scientific evidence supporting our concerns about the safety and abuse potential of kratom.

We have been especially concerned about the use of kratom to treat opioid withdrawal symptoms, as there is no reliable evidence to support the use of kratom as a treatment for opioid use disorder and significant safety issues exist. We recognize the need and desire for alternative treatments for both the treatment of opioid addiction, as well as the treatment of chronic pain. The FDA stands ready to evaluate evidence that could demonstrate a medicinal purpose for kratom. However, to date, we have received no such submissions and are not aware of any evidence that would meet the agency's standard for approval.

The FDA's PHASE model used to assess kratom

Federal agencies need to act quickly to evaluate the abuse potential of newly identified designer street drugs for which limited or no pharmacological data are yet available. This is why the FDA developed the Public Health Assessment via Structural Evaluation (PHASE) methodology – a tool to help us simulate, using 3-D computer technology, how the chemical constituents of a substance (such as the compounds/alkaloids found in kratom) are structured at a molecular level, how they may behave inside the body, and how they can potentially affect the brain. In effect, PHASE uses the molecular structure of a substance to predict its biological function in the body. For example, the modelling platform can simulate how a substance will affect various receptors in the brain based on a product's chemical structure and its similarity to controlled substances for which data are already available.

Using this computational model, scientists at the FDA first analyzed the chemical structures of the 25 most prevalent compounds in kratom. From this analysis, the agency concluded that all of the compounds share the most structural similarities with controlled opioid analgesics, such as morphine derivatives.

Next, our scientists analyzed the chemical structure of these kratom compounds against the software to determine its likely biologic targets. The model predicted that 22 (including mitragynine) of the 25 compounds in kratom bind to mu-opioid receptors. This model, together with previously available experimental data, confirmed that two of the top five most prevalent compounds (including mitragynine) are known to activate opioid receptors ("opioid agonists").

The new data provides even stronger evidence of kratom compounds' opioid properties.

The computational model also predicted that some of the kratom compounds may bind to the receptors in the brain that may contribute to stress responses that impact neurologic and cardiovascular function. The agency has previously warned of the serious side effects associated with kratom including seizures and respiratory depression.

The third aspect of the model is the 3-D image we generate to look at not just where these compounds bind, but how strongly they bind to their biological targets. We found that kratom has a strong bind to mu-opioid receptors, comparable to scheduled opioid drugs.

So what does this body of scientific evidence mean? The FDA relies on this kind of sophisticated model and simulation to supplement its data on how patients react to drugs; often as a way to fully elucidate the biological activity of a new substance. The data from the PHASE model shows us that kratom compounds are predicted to affect the body just like opioids. Based on the scientific information in the literature and further supported by our computational modeling and the reports of its adverse effects in humans, we feel confident in calling compounds found in kratom, opioids.

Furthermore, this highlights the power of our computational model-based approach to rapidly assess any newly identified natural or synthetic opioids to respond to a public health emergency.

Learnings from reports of death associated with kratom

We've been carefully monitoring the use of kratom for several years, and have placed kratom products on import alert to prevent them from entering the country illegally. We have also conducted several product seizures. These actions were based, in part, on a body of academic research, as well as reports we have received, suggesting harm associated with its use. And we are not alone in our evaluation and our public health concerns. Numerous countries, states and cities have banned kratom from entering their jurisdictions. We described some of this information in a public health advisory (/news-events/public-health-focus/fda-and-kratom) in November 2017, in which we urged consumers not to use kratom or any compounds found in the plant.

Now, I'd like to share more information about the tragic reports we have received of additional deaths involving the use of kratom. Looking at the information we have received – including academic research, poison control data, medical examiner reports, social science research and adverse event reports – we now have 44 reported deaths associated with the use of kratom. This is an increase since our November advisory, which noted 36 deaths associated with these products. We're continuing to review the newly received reports and will release those soon. But it's important to note that these new reports include information consistent with the previous reports.

Today, we're releasing the reports of the 36 deaths (/news-events/public-health-focus/fda-and-kratom) we referenced in November. These reports underscore the serious and sometimes deadly risks of using kratom and the potential interactions associated with this drug. Overall, many of the cases received could not be fully assessed because of limited information provided; however, one new report of death was of particular concern. This individual had no known historical or toxicologic evidence of opioid use, except for kratom. We're continuing to investigate this report, but the information we have so far reinforces our concerns about the use of kratom. In addition, a few assessable cases with fatal outcomes raise concern that kratom is being used in combination with other drugs that affect the brain, including illicit drugs, prescription opioids, benzodiazepines and over-the-counter medications, like the anti-diarrheal medicine, loperamide. Cases of mixing kratom, other opioids, and other types of medication is extremely troubling because the activity of kratom at opioid receptors indicates there may be similar risks of combining kratom with certain drugs, just as there are with FDA-approved opioids.

However, unlike kratom, FDA-approved drugs have undergone extensive review for safety and efficacy, and the agency continuously tracks safety data for emerging safety risks that were previously unknown. So we have better information about the risks associated with these products; and can better inform the public of new safety concerns. For example, in August 2016 (/drugs/information-drug-class/new-safety-measures-announced-opioid-analgesics-prescription-opioid-cough-products-and), the FDA required a class-wide change to drug labeling to help inform health care providers and patients of the serious risks (including respiratory depression, coma and death) associated with the combined use of certain opioid medications and benzodiazepines. In June 2016 (/drugs/drug-safety-and-availability/fda-drug-safety-communication-fda-warns-about-serious-heart-problems-high-doses-antidiarrheal), the agency also issued a warning that taking significantly high doses of loperamide, including through abuse or misuse of the product to achieve euphoria or self-treat opioid withdrawal, can cause serious heart problems that can lead to death. We also recently took steps (/drugs/drug-safety-and-availability/fda-drug-safety-communication-fda-limits-packaging-anti-diarrhea-medicine-loperamide-imodium) to help reduce abuse of loperamide by requesting packaging restrictions for these products sold "over-the-counter."

Taken in total, the scientific evidence we've evaluated about kratom provides a clear picture of the biologic effect of this substance. Kratom should not be used to treat medical conditions, nor should it be used as an alternative to prescription opioids. There is no evidence to indicate that kratom is safe or effective for any medical use. And claiming that kratom is benign because it's "just a plant" is shortsighted and dangerous. After all, heroin (https://www.drugabuse.gov/publications/drugfacts/heroin) is an illegal, dangerous, and highly-addictive substance containing the opioid morphine, derived from the seed pod of the various opium poppy plants.

Further, as the scientific data and adverse event reports have clearly revealed, compounds in kratom make it so it isn't just a plant – it's an opioid. And it's an opioid that's associated with novel risks because of the variability in how it's being formulated, sold and used recreationally and by those who are seeking to self-medicate for pain or who use kratom to treat opioid withdrawal symptoms. We recognize that many people have unmet needs when it comes to treating pain or addiction disorders. For individuals seeking treatment for opioid addiction who are being told that kratom can be an effective treatment, I urge you to seek help from a health care provider. There are safe and effective, FDA-approved medical therapies available for the treatment of opioid addiction. Combined with psychosocial support, these treatments are effective. Importantly, there are three drugs (buprenorphine, methadone, and naltrexone) approved by the FDA for the treatment of opioid addiction, and the agency is committed to promoting more widespread innovation and access to these treatments to help those suffering from an opioid use disorder transition to lives of sobriety. There are also safer, non-opioid options to treat pain. We recognize that some patients have tried available therapies, and still have unmet medical needs. We're deeply committed to these patients, and to advancing new, safe and effective options for those suffering from these conditions.

4 Myths about Kratom That You Should Stop Believing Now

By Manjari Bansal

> Kratom is a natural product, but that doesn't mean it is always safe. Here are some myths about kratom that you should be aware of.

Kratom is an opioid-like substance obtained from the leaves of a plant found in Southeast Asia and Africa. Since it is often called a "natural supplement", you may think it is harmless to consume. But is kratom safe? Kratom side effects can be harmful and have even included death in severe cases. Read on to debunk kratom myths and avoid serious side effects.

1. I am seeking treatment for: Myself Loved One

Myth 1: Kratom is not addictive.

When you take kratom, it produces effects similar to both opioids and stimulants, according to the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA). Chemicals found in kratom interact with opioid receptors in your brain and produce feelings of pleasure, reduced pain, sedation, sociability, and excitement.

Since it has opioid-like effects, "Kratom can be addictive and can cause withdrawal symptoms," Monty Ghosh, MD, addiction specialist at the University of Alberta Hospital in Edmonton, tells WebMD Connect to Care.

"As such, people need to be careful when taking kratom, and it can lead to concerns of dependence and misuse," Ghosh says.

Myth 2: You can safely use kratom in medication assisted treatment for opioid addiction.

However, since kratom also has opioid-like properties, it carries many of the same risks as opioids, including dependence and uncomfortable side effects, reports NIDA.

“Kratom can be just as dangerous as opioids, and the most common way to treat kratom disorder is by using medications which we use to treat opioid use disorder like buprenorphine/naloxone,” Ghosh says.

NIDA also notes that there is no scientific evidence proving that kratom can be effectively used within medication assisted treatment for opioid addiction or opioid withdrawal symptoms.

Myth 3: There is no risk of overdose with kratom.

“People can still overdose with kratom, usually when mixed with other substances, but it can act as a depressant and as such can lead to overdoses,” Ghosh says.

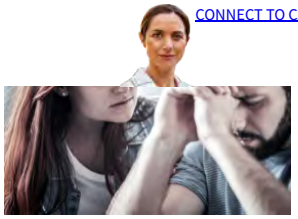
According to NIDA, there are multiple reports of death following kratom use. In 2017, the FDA reported nearly 44 deaths associated with kratom use, with one case involving the use of pure kratom. However, most of these kratom-related deaths were due to the intake of kratom and other substances like alcohol, opioids, and benzodiazepines.

NIDA also notes that many of these fatalities appear to have resulted from the use of adulterated kratom products. For example, there are reports of some kratom products labeled as dietary supplements being laced with dangerous substances that have caused death when ingested.

Myth 4: There are no kratom side effects, since it is a supplement.

“Supplements actually are not regulated by the FDA. Therefore, there is no guarantee that a supplement will actually contain the ingredients listed on the label. Also, there are no requirements for scientific studies to assess its efficacy. Lastly, side effects are still a possibility,” Julian Lagoy, MD, a psychiatrist with Community Psychiatry + MindPath Care Centers, tells WebMD Connect to Care.

Kratom is obtained from plants, but that does not mean it is entirely safe, reports Cleveland Clinic. It can cause serious side effects like:



- Heart attack and abnormal heartbeat
- Hallucination
- Brain disease
- Insomnia
- Liver damage
- Kidney damage
- Respiratory depression
- Seizures

Kratom

- "Kratom" commonly refers to an herbal substance that can produce opioid- and stimulant-like effects. Kratom and kratom-based products are currently legal and accessible in many areas, though U.S. and international agencies continue to review emerging evidence to inform kratom policy.[1]
- While there are no uses for kratom approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, people report using kratom to manage drug withdrawal symptoms and cravings (especially related to opioid use), pain, fatigue and mental health problems.[2,3,4] NIDA supports and conducts research to evaluate potential medicinal uses for kratom and related chemical compounds.
- NIDA also supports research towards better understanding the health and safety effects of kratom use. Rare but serious effects have been reported in people who use kratom, including psychiatric, cardiovascular, gastrointestinal and respiratory problems.[1,5] Compared to deaths from other drugs, a very small number of deaths have been linked to kratom products and nearly all cases involved other drugs or contaminants.[1,6,7,8,9,10]

What is kratom?

"Kratom" refers to both Mitragyna speciosa, a tree native to Southeast Asia, and to products derived from its leaves that are marketed as herbal supplements. Kratom leaves contain many chemical compounds (known as bioactive alkaloids) that can affect the body. The most well-studied compounds related to kratom are mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine.[1] (See How do kratom compounds work in the brain?)

Much is still unknown about chemical compounds related to kratom, the short- and long-term health and safety impacts of kratom use and kratom's potential therapeutic uses. NIDA supports and conducts research on kratom and related chemical compounds to help inform kratom policy and health decision-making around kratom use. (See How is NIDA advancing research on about kratom?)

While kratom or its related compounds have not been approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration as safe and effective for any medical use, people report using kratom products to alleviate drug withdrawal symptoms and cravings (particularly for opioids), to alleviate pain and to help manage mental health problems.[3,4,11,12,13,14,15,16] (See Why do people use kratom?) NIDA is particularly interested in studying how kratom use may impact opioid use, which continues to drive the drug overdose epidemic in the United States.

People typically use kratom by swallowing raw plant matter in capsule or powder form, mixing kratom powder into food or drinks, brewing the leaves as a tea, or taking liquid kratom extract.[1] People who use kratom report both stimulant-like effects (increased energy, alertness and rapid heart rate) and effects that are similar to opioids and sedatives (relaxation, pain relief and confusion).[10,17] Studies and case reports have also indicated rare adverse effects may be associated with kratom or individual kratom compounds.[1,9] (See How does kratom affect the body?; Is kratom safe?)

Anthropologists report that kratom has been used in Southeast Asia for hundreds of years as a multi-purpose remedy in traditional medicine, to increase alertness and energy while working and during social gatherings.[18] While estimates of the scope of kratom use in the United States vary,[19] the expansion of kratom vendors and increasing case reports suggest kratom use has become more common over the past two decades.[20]

How does kratom affect the body?

Researchers are still learning how kratom and kratom compounds affect the body, as well as how short- and long-term kratom use may impact health. While evidence is quickly evolving, early studies have revealed important information about how the drug works.

- Effects may vary widely. Like all drugs, kratom's effects may depend on the amount taken, potency (concentration and strength), formulation of the product, the way it is ingested, other drugs in a person's system, a person's underlying medical conditions, and a person's previous experience with the substance, among other factors.[3, 4, 17] Importantly, kratom products vary, so effects are difficult to predict. Some kratom products have been found to contain contaminants that produce effects not associated with kratom or kratom compounds alone.[6, 7, 21] Learn more: Is kratom safe?

- Kratom produces opioid- and stimulant-like effects. People who use kratom report both stimulant-like effects (increased energy, alertness and rapid heart rate) and effects that are similar to opioids and sedatives (relaxation, pain relief and confusion). While many people who use kratom report that smaller doses of kratom produce stimulant-like effects and larger doses produce opioid- or sedative-like effects,[4] studies have not yet established that these effects depend on the amount or method of kratom consumed.[10, 17]

- Mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine, and other kratom compounds drive these effects. The effect of kratom products can vary depending on the concentration and combination of specific kratom compounds within the product. While kratom leaves contain many chemical compounds that may influence the human body, the most well-studied is mitragynine. When ingested, mitragynine breaks down into another chemical called 7-hydroxymitragynine, which also influences the body and is an important subject of research.[22] Learn more: How do kratom compounds work in the brain?

- Adverse effects range from mild to severe. Some people who use kratom have reported mild side effects, such as nausea, constipation, dizziness and drowsiness.[3, 4] In case reports, clinicians report seeing patients with a wide range of rare but serious adverse effects associated with kratom exposure—including mental and neurological symptoms (confusion, tremors and seizures), heart and lung problems (high blood pressure and slow breathing), gastrointestinal problems (nausea and vomiting) and liver problems.[1, 23] A very small number of deaths have been linked to kratom products, and nearly all cases involved other drugs or contaminants.[1, 6, 7, 8, 21, 24] (See Is kratom safe?)

- Drug interactions may influence effects. Studies suggest many people who use kratom also use other drugs and have conditions for which medications are often prescribed.[3, 4, 17] Case reports suggest using kratom in combination with other drugs (sometimes called polysubstance use) may produce severe adverse effects, such as liver problems or even death.[25] More research is needed to better understand the impact of using kratom in combination with other substances. (See Is kratom safe?)

- Long-term health effects are not well understood. Because kratom research is relatively new compared to more widely used drugs, there is little evidence to determine how kratom use may affect someone over time. Case reports do show regular, long-term, kratom use in large amounts may be associated with serious liver problems. These cases appear to occur unpredictably in a small minority of people who use kratom, and it is unclear what role other substances and underlying health conditions may play.[9, 26] (See Is kratom safe?) Researchers are also still learning how often and to what extent people who use kratom experience withdrawal or substance use disorder symptoms related to kratom use. Learn more: Is kratom addictive? Do people experience kratom withdrawal?

- Research on potential therapeutic effects of kratom is ongoing. Researchers have not proven kratom to be safe or effective for any medical purpose, though kratom has been used in traditional medicine.[18] Many people who use kratom products report doing so to self-treat pain, anxiety, depression, fatigue, and drug cravings and withdrawal symptoms (especially related to opioid use).[1, 3] NIDA supports and conducts research on therapeutic uses of kratom and related compounds. How do kratom compounds work in the brain?

Kratom leaves contain many chemical compounds (known as bioactive alkaloids) that influence the body. The most well-studied kratom-related compounds are mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine. Mitragynine is found in kratom leaves and breaks down into 7-hydroxymitragynine in the body when digested.[22, 27] Both activate mu-opioid receptors (specific molecular structures on the surface of nerve cells), but the resulting effects only partially compare to those of opioids like heroin or oxycodone.[28]

Some research suggests that mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine may not cause some of the more serious adverse effects associated with opioid use—such as respiratory depression (trouble breathing)—that can occur during a life-threatening opioid overdose.[29] Scientists also have observed that mitragynine may bind to adrenergic receptors, serotonin receptors and dopamine receptors, which may be responsible for some of the arousing effects some people who use kratom report experiencing.[1, 30, 31]

Better understanding where and how kratom compounds work in the brain is an active area of NIDA-funded research. This basic research plays an important role in identifying kratom's health effects and potential therapeutic uses. Learn more: How is NIDA advancing research on kratom?

How is NIDA advancing research on kratom?

Scientific research on kratom is relatively new compared to research on more widely used drugs. Much is still unknown about chemical compounds related to kratom, the short- and long-term health and safety impacts of kratom use and kratom's potential therapeutic uses. In response to reports of increases in kratom exposures in the United States[6] and emerging questions about kratom and its health effects, NIDA is supporting research on kratom's use, effects, mechanisms and therapeutic potential.

To help inform kratom policy and health decision-making around kratom use, NIDA conducts and supports research on how kratom compounds work in the brain, as well as research on kratom use patterns, health effects, therapeutic uses and drug interactions. Because many people who use kratom also report using or previously using opioids and experiencing opioid use disorder,[2, 3] NIDA is particularly interested in studying how kratom use may impact opioid use, which has driven the drug overdose epidemic in the United States. Early studies have found that some people report using kratom to ease craving and withdrawal symptoms associated with other substances, including opioids and stimulants.[5, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16]

NIDA and the NIH HEAL (Helping to End Addiction Long-term℠) Initiative are supporting several studies evaluating kratom and related compounds as potential treatments for chronic pain and for opioid withdrawal and opioid use disorder. One of these projects (also supported by the National Center for Advancing Translational Sciences and National Institute of Neurological Disorders and Stroke) includes efforts to help develop new medications, including kratom-derived products, as potential treatments for opioid use disorder.

NIDA also supports preclinical research to better understand how multiple kratom compounds produce complex pharmacological and behavioral effects, to evaluate kratom as a potential therapy for opioid use disorder and to investigate the chemistry and biology of kratom-derived compounds for their use as therapeutic drugs and as research tools. (See Could kratom be used as medicine?)

What is the scope of kratom use in the United States?

Among people aged 12 or older in 2020, an estimated 0.8% (or 2,101,000) reported using kratom in the past 12 months.*

Source: 2020 National Survey on Drug Use and Health

Why do people use kratom?

NIDA conducts and supports research to better understand the diverse reasons people use kratom.[3] Kratom has been used in its native Southeast Asia for centuries to produce opioid- and stimulant-like effects, including increased energy and relaxation.[18] (See How does kratom affect the body?)

In recent years, studies suggest people across the globe use kratom for these and many other reasons.[1, 3, 4] Researchers have found that people report using kratom to alleviate pain, to address symptoms of mental health conditions like anxiety and depression, to help stop or reduce opioid or other substance use and to manage withdrawal symptoms and cravings related to opioids and other drugs. Most report multiple reasons for using kratom.[3, 11, 32]

While research is underway to explore possible therapeutic benefits (see Could kratom be used as medicine?), kratom products have not been demonstrated to be safe and effective for any medical condition. Of note, safe and effective medications are approved to help control withdrawal symptoms and cravings associated with opioid use disorder, as well as other substance use disorders. Learn more about pain treatment from the NIH Pain Consortium and about mental health treatment from the National Institute of Mental Health.

Is kratom safe?

U.S. and international agencies have expressed concern that kratom products may cause serious harm.[1] There are no uses for kratom approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA), and the FDA has warned consumers not to use kratom products because of potential adverse effects.

The FDA, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and NIDA support and conduct research to measure and better understand the short- and long-term safety risks of kratom use and inform policy around kratom regulation.

Currently, several safety issues related to kratom have been identified:

- Kratom products may contain harmful contaminants. There are no uses for kratom approved by the FDA, and kratom products have been found to contain contaminants that produce effects not associated with kratom or kratom compounds alone, including heavy metals and harmful bacteria.[1, 6, 7, 8, 21] Of note, researchers and regulators have found similar instances of contamination in many other products marketed as herbal supplements.[33, 34] Read more about supplement regulation from the FDA.

- Adverse effects range from mild to severe. Some people who use kratom have reported mild side effects, such as nausea, constipation, dizziness and drowsiness.[3, 4] In case reports, clinicians report seeing patients with a wide range of very rare but serious adverse effects associated with kratom exposure—including mental and neurological symptoms (confusion, tremors and seizures), heart and lung problems (high blood pressure and slow breathing), gastrointestinal problems (nausea and vomiting) and liver problems.[1, 23] Researchers continue to study potential adverse effects in humans, animal models and cells, including possible damage to the cardiovascular system.[10, 23, 35] (See How does kratom affect the body?)

- A very small number of deaths have been linked to kratom products compared to deaths from other drugs.[1, 6, 7, 8, 24] While more research is needed, it appears that fatal overdose from kratom use alone is extremely rare. A 2019 report found that 11 deaths between 2011 and 2017 in the United States were associated with kratom exposure, including two deaths associated with kratom exposure alone.[6] In contrast, during that same period, more than 200,000 people died from opioid-related overdose.[36]

- Drug interactions may influence effects. Studies suggest many people who use kratom also use other drugs and have conditions for which medications are often prescribed,[3, 4, 17] and case reports suggest polysubstance use (the use of multiple drugs) involving kratom has been associated with severe adverse effects, such as death and liver problems.[25] More research is needed in this area to assess the safety of using kratom in combination with other substances.

- Long-term health and safety effects are not well understood. Because kratom research is relatively new compared to research on more widely used drugs, there is little evidence to determine how kratom use may affect someone over time. Case reports do show regular, long-term, kratom use in large amounts may be associated with serious liver problems. These cases appear to occur unpredictably in a small minority of people who use kratom, and it is unclear what role other substances and underlying health conditions may play.[9, 26]

- Effects on pregnancy are not well understood. Very little research is available on kratom use before, during and after pregnancy, but there have been reports of opioid-like neonatal abstinence syndrome in infants born to women who regularly use kratom.[37] Learn more: How does kratom use affect pregnancy?

- Safety effects of intoxication are not well understood. The impact of kratom intoxication (taking enough to be impaired) on driving, operating heavy machinery, or performing other tasks that could be dangerous if impaired has not been extensively studied.[9, 38, 39]

Learn more about kratom and safety from the FDA.

How does kratom use affect pregnancy?

Very little research is available on kratom use before, during and after pregnancy. A 2021 report suggests that many cases of kratom use during pregnancy likely also involve the use of other substances, and the effects of kratom alone on pregnancy are difficult to determine without further research. The same report identified at least five cases of opioid-like neonatal abstinence syndrome in infants born to women who regularly used kratom but not opioids. The infants in these cases all responded well to standard treatments given to infants experiencing neonatal abstinence syndrome related to opioids.[39]

Is kratom addictive? Do people experience kratom withdrawal?

NIDA conducts and supports research to better understand how often and to what extent people who use kratom experience withdrawal and substance use disorder symptoms related to kratom use.

To be diagnosed with a substance use disorder, a person must meet specific diagnostic criteria for continued, compulsive substance use despite negative consequences. The Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, Fifth Edition (DSM-5)—a reference text published by the American Psychiatric Association that health professionals use to diagnose substance use disorders and other psychiatric disorders—does not include a specific diagnosis related to kratom use.[40] However, some researchers studying kratom have modified criteria to study kratom use patterns and symptoms that resemble other substance use disorders.[3]

Studies suggest people may experience mild to moderate withdrawal symptoms when they stop regular kratom use,[41, 42] but more research is needed to understand to what extent people develop substance use disorder symptoms related to kratom.[1, 3, 9]

Preliminary data from anonymous surveys of people who use kratom suggest a minority of people report experiencing kratom-related withdrawal symptoms and a smaller minority report experiencing substance use disorder symptoms related to kratom use.[3]

Some experts are concerned about kratom's addictive potential because the main kratom compounds, mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, partially activate the same receptors (specific molecular structures on the surface of nerve cells) in the brain on which drugs with known addictive properties act. However, researchers have observed that the way kratom compounds activate these receptors may reduce the potential for addiction relative to opioids.[28, 29, 30, 31] Further, studies in animal models indicate that the addictive potential of mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine may differ from one another.[43] Further research is needed to better understand how various compounds related to kratom interact to influence the risk of withdrawal and addiction. (See How do kratom compounds work in the brain?)

How are withdrawal and substance use disorder symptoms related to kratom use treated?

While withdrawal and substance use disorder symptoms related to kratom use have not been extensively studied, some people who use kratom report experiencing them.[1, 3, 9] (See Is kratom addictive? Do people experience kratom withdrawal?) There are currently no approved medical therapies for these conditions. In very limited cases, some researchers have reported using medications[44, 45, 46] and other therapies[47] to address withdrawal and substance use disorder symptoms related to kratom use[41] in humans and animal models—though robust clinical trials are still needed to evaluate these and other experimental treatment options.

See more information on seeking substance use treatment and other medical attention.

Could kratom be used as medicine?

NIDA and other institutes at NIH support and conduct research to evaluate potential medicinal uses for kratom and kratom compounds. While kratom has not been proven safe or effective for any medical purpose, kratom has been used in traditional medicine in some countries,[1, 18] and many people who use kratom report doing so to self-medicate for pain, anxiety, depression, substance use disorders and substance withdrawal.[1, 3, 11] Studies in animal models suggest kratom and related compounds potentially have other therapeutic properties, such as antidepressant and pain-relieving properties, that may warrant further study.[1, 48]

Of particular interest to NIDA, early studies suggest kratom and kratom compounds warrant further study as experimental treatments for substance use disorders, specifically opioid use disorder.[9, 48] Such treatments are urgently needed to help curb the drug overdose epidemic in the United States. NIDA and its partners conduct and support research evaluating kratom and related compounds as potential treatments for chronic pain and for opioid withdrawal and opioid use disorder. Learn more: How is NIDA advancing research on kratom?

Is kratom legal?

While kratom use or sale has been banned or restricted in several countries,[9] kratom products are currently legal and accessible online[49] and in stores in many areas of the United States. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) has listed kratom as a "drug of concern," though kratom and kratom compounds are not listed on the U.S. schedule of controlled substances.

In 2021, the World Health Organization's (WHO) Expert Committee on Drug Dependence (EDCC) examined the evidence on kratom's health effects and concluded that there is insufficient evidence of adverse effects that would warrant additional critical review or inclusion in the United Nations list of internationally controlled substances. (See the full WHO ECDD report on kratom.) Kratom remains on the list of substances under surveillance by the WHO ECDD.

Reason for Alert:

FDA has seen an increase in the number of shipments of dietary supplements and bulk dietary ingredients that are, or contain kratom, also known as Mitragyna speciosa, mitragynine extract, biak-biak, cratom, gratom, ithang, kakuam, katawn, kedemba, ketum, krathom, krton, mambog, madat, Maeng da leaf, nauclea, Nauclea speciosa, or thang. These shipments of kratom have come in a variety of forms, including capsules, whole leaves, processed leaves, leaf resins, leaf extracts, powdered leaves, and bulk liquids made of leaf extracts. Importers' websites have sometimes contained information about how their products are used.

Kratom is a botanical that qualifies as a dietary ingredient under section 201(ff)(1) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (the Act) [21 U.S.C. 321(ff)(1)]. When marketed as a dietary ingredient, FDA also considers kratom to be a new dietary ingredient under section 413(d) of the Act [21 U.S.C. 350b(d)] because, to the best of the agency's knowledge, there is no information demonstrating that this substance was marketed as a dietary ingredient in the United States before October 15, 1994.

Furthermore, based on FDA's review of the publicly available information regarding kratom, there does not appear to be a history of use or other evidence of safety establishing that kratom will reasonably be expected to be safe as a dietary ingredient. In fact, the scientific literature disclosed serious concerns regarding the toxicity of kratom in multiple organ systems. Consumption of kratom can lead to a number of health impacts, including respiratory depression, nervousness, agitation, aggression, sleeplessness, hallucinations, delusions, tremors, loss of libido, constipation, skin hyperpigmentation, nausea, vomiting, and severe withdrawal signs and symptoms. In the absence of a history of use or other evidence of safety establishing that kratom will reasonably be expected to be safe as a dietary ingredient, kratom and kratom-containing dietary supplements and bulk dietary ingredients are adulterated under section 402(f)(1)(B) of the Act [21 U.S.C. 342(f)(1)(B)], because they contain a new dietary ingredient for which there is inadequate information to provide reasonable assurance that such ingredient does not present a significant or unreasonable risk of illness or injury.

Guidance:

Districts may detain, without physical examination, the specified products from the firms identified in the RED LIST of this alert. The specified dietary supplements and bulk dietary ingredients from the firms listed on the RED LIST of this Import Alert have been found to contain kratom.

When detained products appear to be dietary supplements or bulk dietary ingredients as discussed in this alert and are not currently listed on the RED LIST of this alert, Districts should forward appropriate evidence/documentation as a "Center Review Detention" case via CMS to CFSAN/OC/DE/LDSCT team. Based on the Center's evaluation, a CMS case for addition to the RED LIST of this alert may be forwarded to DIO/IOMB team by the District's Compliance Branch.

Districts should be on alert to the possibility that the labeling, marketing, and/or promotion of kratom and kratom-containing products may indicate that such products appear to be unapproved and/or misbranded drugs. For such products, Import Alert 66-41 may be applicable.

For questions or issues involving import operations, contact DIO's Import Operations and Maintenance Branch at (301) 796-0356.

For questions or issues involving OASIS or PREDICT screening, contact DCS's Import Compliance Systems Branch at ORAOISMDSSIMPCOMPLSYSBR@fda.hhs.gov

For questions or issues concerning preparation of samples for analysis or analytical methodology, contact ORA's Office of Regulatory Science at 301-796-6600.

For questions on policy, sample collection recommendations, or other any addition questions, contact CFSAN/Division of Enforcement's Labeling and Dietary Supplement Compliance Team (HFS-608) at CFSANEnforcement@fda.hhs.gov

Background:

- The US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) recommended scheduling kratom's alkaloids, mitragynine (MG) and 7-hydroxymitragynine (7-HMG) under the Controlled Substances Act (CSA), in 2016.[1] In an unprecedented action, the Drug Enforcement Administration withdrew that recommendation and requested the FDA provide more scientific information to justify the scheduling request.

- On October 17, 2017, the FDA submitted a second scheduling request for MG and 7-HMG, and that recommendation was, after a full review of the evidence and data supporting that recommendation, withdrawn by the US Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) on August 16, 2018[2] because the evidence and data provided failed to meet the requirements for scheduling. In the withdrawal of the scheduling recommendation from the DEA by HHS Assistant Secretary of Health, Dr. Brett Giroir stated that the "decision is based on many factors, in part on new data, and in part on the relative lack of evidence, combined with an unknown and potentially substantial risk to public health if these chemicals were scheduled at this time." Since Dr. Giroir's withdrawal letter, there have been more than 100 new published research reports that further strengthen the case for kratom not being appropriate for scheduling.

- The World Health Organization (WHO) Expert Committee on Drug Dependence (ECDD) reported on December 1, 2021, they had voted

[1] https://www.federalregister.gov/documents/2016/10/13/2016-24659/withdrawal-of-notice-of-intent-to-temporarily-place-mitragynine-and-7-hydroxymitragynine-into overwhelmingly that there was “insufficient evidence” to justify an international ban on kratom.[3]

- The National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) initially supported the FDA scheduling recommendation, but when the DEA initially withdrew the first scheduling recommendation from the FDA, they commenced their own internal review of the key issues of kratom’s addiction liability, and the claimed deaths caused by kratom. NIDA concurrently funded two independent studies on the addiction liability of kratom’s alkaloids that were published in June and July 2018, and those conclusions directly address why kratom is not scheduled today by the DEA because it does not meet the scheduling criteria in the CSA:

    - Abuse liability and therapeutic potential of the Mitragyna speciosa (kratom) alkaloids mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, Hemby, et. al., that concluded "present findings indicate that MG does not have abuse potential and reduces morphine intake, desired characteristics of candidate pharmacotherapies for opiate addiction and withdrawal . . . “[4]

    - Abuse liability of mitragynine assessed with a self-administration procedure in rats, Yue, et. al., that concluded “these results suggest a limited abuse liability of mitragynine and potential for mitragynine treatment to specifically reduce opioid abuse. With the current prevalence of opioid abuse and misuse, it appears currently that mitragynine is deserving of more extensive exploration for its development or that of an analog as a medical treatment for opioid abuse.[5]

- In addition to NIDA and HHS rejecting the FDA’s claims about kratom’s safety and addiction profile, the U.S. Congress approved Report Language on kratom in the FY 2022 Labor, Health and Human Services, Education, and Related Agencies Appropriations Bill[6] as follows:

    > “Kratom. — The [Appropriations] Committee recognizes that NIDA-funded research has contributed to the continued understanding of the health impacts of kratom, including its constituent compounds, mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine. The Committee is aware of the potential promising results of kratom for acute and chronic pain patients who seek safer alternatives to sometimes dangerously addictive and potentially deadly prescription opioids and of research investigating the use of kratom’s constituent compounds for opioid use disorder. The Committee directs NIDA to continue to invest in this important research, especially considering the increase in overdose deaths during the COVID–19 pandemic." (p. 135)

"Kratom.—The [Appropriations] Committee directs the Secretary to maintain current Agency policy to not recommend that the substances mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, known as kratom, be permanently controlled in Schedule I of the Controlled Substances Act, either temporarily or permanently […] The Committee encourages AHRQ to continue to fund research on natural products that are used by many to treat pain in place of opioids, including kratom […] The Committee recommends an additional $3,000,000 for this research and directs AHRQ to make center-based grants to address research which will lead to clinical trials in geographic regions which are among the hardest hit by the opioid crisis." (p.189)

- In a presentation to WHO's ECDD, Marilyn Huestis, PhD, testified on recent research that showed "the lack of respiratory depression following high-dose mitragynine (kratom) in rats questions the appropriateness of designating kratom as a cause of death in postmortem cases."[7]

- Researchers at Johns Hopkins University concluded that 87% of adult consumers using kratom to treat opioid dependence reported relief from withdrawal symptoms, and 35% were opioid free within a year. The researchers concluded that serious adverse events are uncommon even at high consumption rates.[8]

- A newly published peer-reviewed research article on "Kratom Abuse Potential 2021: An Updated Eight Factor Analysis"[9] outlines the specific reasons why kratom is not a candidate for scheduling under the CSA – and given the mirrored criteria in the Nevada statute, it applies equally to the proposed scheduling before the Board in the April 14 hearing.

- HHS Secretary Becerra, in a letter to US Senator Mike Lee (UT) and Congressman Mark Pocan (WI) on March 16, 2022, stated that "HHS and its component agencies are working to address the knowledge gaps [on kratom] through research" and "[W]hile options for scheduling have been discussed, we believe that additional data and information are needed to understand the public health impact of kratom in terms of therapeutic benefits as well as safety risk. Discussions continue within HHS on mitigating actions to best address the various public health concerns presented, including potential unintended consequences that may arise from transitioning to riskier alternatives (for example fentanyl) if kratom were to be scheduled."

Given that HHS, FDA, NIDA, and NIH believe that additional data is needed to assess the public health impact in terms of therapeutic benefits and safety risks, it seems the Nevada Board of Pharmacy should wait for that data to be developed and assessed prior to any scheduling action on kratom in Nevada.

In brief, the existing scientific literature and research shows there is no evidence of an imminent threat to public health (a requirement for temporary or emergency scheduling under the CSA and scheduling under the Nevada Uniform Controlled Substances Act) and that kratom was not like opioids in its safety and addiction risks.

There is substantial evidence that millions of people are using kratom for reasons associated with health and well-being, including in place of opioids they had been using for pain and/or addiction, and that thousands of people would be at risk of relapse to opioids and overdose if sale of kratom were banned and possession considered a narcotic criminal offense.

The updated Eight Factor Analysis, and the assessment of HHS Assistant Secretary of Health Dr. Girior, concluded that banning kratom would foreseeably lead to the emergence of a deadly illicit market that would worsen what appeared to be the main problems with kratom, namely contaminated, adulterated, and inappropriately marketed products. The Nevada Legislature took the important step to regulate kratom products to substantially reduce the risk of adulterated, contaminated, or mislabeled kratom products being offered for sale to Nevada residents with the enactment of AB 303 in 2019.[10]

Importantly, the updated Eight Factor Analysis reaffirms all of the conclusions of the 2018 report. The more than 100 new peer-reviewed published studies by researchers worldwide and many laboratory studies in the US with funding from the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA), sustain those earlier findings. These studies provide a much fuller characterization of how kratom works and how it provides the benefits that many people report as their reason for use, but without narcotic-like addiction and overdose risks. The studies include the state-of-the-art types of animal abuse and physical dependence/withdrawal studies that FDA requires for new medicines and which DEA relies on for drug scheduling decisions. New clinical studies in humans provide initial assessments of kratom's physiological health and safety related effects on liver, kidney, and cardiovascular function, as well as brain function, using magnetic resonance imaging techniques.

Conclusions based on new studies since January 1, 2018

- Since the Henningfield, Fant & Wang (2018) 8-FA, there have been over 100 new published scientific studies, reviews, and commentaries by leading kratom experts, and an accelerating research pipeline funded in part by the US National Institutes of Health (NIH) and the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA). These studies provide an increasingly strong evidence base for regulation and policy.

[10] https://www.leg.state.nv.us/App/NELIS/REL/80th2019/Bill/6559/Text

- Nature got it right. There is a convergence of studies showing that the main natural constituent of kratom that accounts for the reasons people use kratom is MG, which carries relatively low abuse and health risks. 7-HMG naturally occurs at very low levels and product standards should prevent marketing of products with levels higher than those that appear to carry little risk.

- Evidence does not support the conclusion that kratom is an imminent public health threat or that it is fueling the opioid and drug overdose epidemic that led to more than 103,000 deaths in 2021. Rather, the evidence supports the conclusion that for many people kratom is a path away from opioids and other drugs to help self-manage craving and withdrawal for people who find kratom more effective, accessible, acceptable, tolerable, and/or prefer natural products.

- Animal drug self-administration, physical dependence, and withdrawal studies show low abuse potential and withdrawal risks of kratom relative to opioids. Furthermore, these studies also show that MG administration can reduce self-administration of morphine and heroin as well as withdrawal from morphine. These findings are consistent with human surveys and studies showing that addiction risks for kratom are overall low as compared to opioids.

- Numerous surveys and field studies of kratom users have been conducted in the US and Malaysia. These new studies largely confirm the earlier large US survey on kratom consumer usage patterns published by Dr. Grundmann (2017).[11] Most US kratom users are 30-50 years old, employed, have some college education, and have health insurance. Leading reasons for use are to self-manage pain, depression, anxiety, to increase focus and alertness analogous to caffeinated beverage use, and to self-manage opioid and other substance use disorders to relieve craving and withdrawal and often the pain that motivates such drug use.

- Surveys also show that users fear a kratom ban and the risks of resumption of opioid and other drug use, and/or turning to illicitly marketed kratom. This makes it foreseeable that thousands of people would be at risk of opioid overdose and other mortality risks associated with illicit drug use, injection drug use, and adulterated kratom products.

- Studies of kratom's alkaloids support the conclusion that that MG and other alkaloids are not appropriately categorized as opioids, as they are diverse in their activity, effects, and mechanisms of action. Moreover, the primary active constituent of kratom, MG, does not produce the signature powerfully rewarding and lethal respiratory depressant effects that characterize morphine-like opioids.

- Kratom PK and safety studies include examination of the pharmacokinetics (PK) and pharmacodynamics (PD) in rats and dogs by oral and intravenous administration of many kratom alkaloids in addition to MG. MG, at human dose equivalents many times higher than humans take, are without acute serious adverse effects and there is little evidence of a respiratory depressant effect.

- Six clinical studies evaluated the effects of long term kratom use on a variety of physiological parameters including kidney and liver function, hematological parameters, cognition, and brain function by magnetic resonance imaging. Although these were relatively small studies, none suggest serious adverse consequences of long term kratom use. It is important to note that these are not definitive safety studies and cannot be used to claim that kratom has no adverse effects on any of the studied physiological domains and limitations of each study were noted in the publications. Nonetheless, the findings are encouraging and should facilitate the conduct of more comprehensive follow-up studies.

- New medicine innovation efforts are developing new molecules as analogs of MG and other kratom alkaloids as possible safer and/or more effective treatments for pain, addiction, depression, and other disorders, due to the promising findings with kratom and its naturally occurring alkaloids. These efforts are also contributing to knowledge about kratom safety and effects; however, New Drug Applications (NDAs) typically require a decade or more of research at costs often exceeding one billion dollars before they can be submitted for review and potential approval by the FDA.

- The pipeline of research and new science has been enhanced in quantity and quality not only by funding from the US National Institutes of Health (NIH) and other organizations, but as well by regular scientific conferences that are fostering global collaboration and cooperation in an exciting new frontier in search of safer and more effective ways to manage health and well-being. Such efforts are working and should be expanded.

- These scientific findings taken together have implications for consideration of kratom regulation by the Controlled Substances Act (CSA). The CSA is intended to protect the public health from substances that pose as imminent threat to public health, and in the case of medicines with a potential for abuse to ensure that they are appropriately regulated if the science supports placement in the CSA. Kratom is not a new drug but rather is a naturally occurring substance with decades of history of use in the US and much longer in Southeast Asia where it grows in abundance and is used by many more people. The scientific evidence does not indicate a profile of meaningful abuse potential or physiological dependence potential of its primary active constituent, mitragynine. This review supports the key findings and action by Assistant Secretary of Health, Dr. Brett Giroir (Giroir, 2018) to rescind the 2017 recommendation (FDA, 2017) to place MG and 7-HMG in Schedule I of the CSA. Specifically, it supports the conclusions that “mitragynine does not satisfy the first of the three statutory requisites for Schedule I”, and that “there is a significant risk of immediate adverse public health consequences for potentially millions of users if kratom or its components are included in Schedule I” and that the very research that all parties agree is needed would be severely stifled by CSA scheduling.

- An important development that relates to overall safety, health benefits and risks of kratom use is a regulatory and policy update and is not included in the science updates: at the time of this writing, six states, Arizona, Georgia, Nevada, Utah, Oklahoma, and Oregon have enacted laws referenced as the Kratom Consumer Protection Act (KCPA). The KCPA establishes a regulatory framework to protect consumers from unsafe and adulterated kratom products. These KCPA laws provide needed consumer protections for consumers.

In support of this submission in opposition to the opposition to the Nevada Board of Pharmacy proposal to schedule mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragygine (alkaloids of the plant kratom), we respectfully submit the attached documents addressing your mandated consideration of each of the Eight Factors required by NRS 453.146.

as a result of this proposed rule would be less than two percent, or an estimated $37,151.00, of the estimated total $1,857,560.00 cost to all steel importers to process the on-line automatic licenses. These calculations were based on an hourly pay rate of $20.00 multiplied by the estimated 92,878 total annual burden hours. Based on the current patterns of license applications, the vast majority of the licenses are applied for by large companies. The approximate cost of a single license is less than 10 minutes of the applicant's time and this is reduced if applicants use templates or the electronic data interface for multiple licenses. This amounts to an average cost per license of $3.33.

This proposed rule contains collection-of-information requirements subject to review and approval by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) under the Paperwork Reduction Act (PRA).

21 CFR Part 1308

[Docket No. DEA–442W]

Withdrawal of Notice of Intent to Temporarily Place Mitragynine and 7-Hydroxymitragynine Into Schedule I AGENCY: Drug Enforcement Administration, Department of Justice.

ACTION: Withdrawal of Notice of Intent; Solicitation of Comments.

SUMMARY: On August 31, 2016, the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) published in the Federal Register a notice of intent to temporarily place mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, which are the main psychoactive constituents of the plant Mitragyna speciosa, also referred to as kratom, into schedule I pursuant to the temporary scheduling provisions of the Controlled Substances Act. Since publishing that notice, DEA has received numerous comments from members of the public challenging the scheduling action and requesting that the agency consider those comments and accompanying information before taking further action. In addition, DEA will receive from the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) a scientific and medical evaluation and scheduling recommendation for these substances, which DEA previously requested.

DEA is therefore taking the following actions: DEA is withdrawing the August 31, 2016 notice of intent; and soliciting comments from the public regarding the scheduling of mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine under the Controlled Substances Act.

DATES: The notice of intent that was published on August 31, 2016 (81 FR 59929) is withdrawn as of October 13, 2016. The comment period will be open until December 1, 2016. All comments for the public record must be submitted electronically or in writing in accordance with the procedures outlined below. Background

Withdrawal of Notice of Intent

The Controlled Substances Act (CSA) contains a temporary scheduling provision, 21 U.S.C. 811(h), pursuant to which the DEA Administrator [1] may temporarily place a substance in schedule I where he finds that doing so is necessary to avoid an imminent hazard to the public safety. This provision of the CSA requires DEA to publish a notice in the Federal Register of its intent to issue a temporary scheduling order at least 30 days before issuing any such order. DEA published such a notice of intent on August 31, 2016, with respect to mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, which are the main psychoactive constituents of the plant commonly known as kratom. 81 FR 59929.

In response to the notice of intent, DEA received numerous comments from the public on mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, including comments offering their opinions regarding the pharmacological effects of these substances. To allow consideration of these comments, as well as others received on or before December 1, 2016, DEA has decided to withdraw the August 31, 2016 notice of intent published at 81 FR 59929. DEA has also requested that the FDA expedite its scientific and medical evaluation and scheduling recommendation for these substances, which DEA previously requested in accordance with 21 U.S.C. 811(b).[2]

Accordingly, the August 31, 2016, notice of intent to temporarily place mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine in schedule I is withdrawn. Mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine therefore remain—as has been the case—noncontrolled substances under federal law.[3]

Consideration of Public Comments and FDA's Analysis

With respect to mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, DEA will consider all public comments received under the above procedures, as well as FDA's scientific and medical evaluation and scheduling recommendation for these substances. Once DEA has received and considered all of this information, DEA will decide whether to proceed with permanent scheduling of mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, or both permanent and temporary scheduling of these substances.

Permanent Scheduling Process: As the CSA provides, if DEA determines that the medical and scientific facts contained in the FDA scheduling evaluation, along with all other relevant data and information, constitute substantial evidence of potential for abuse to support permanent scheduling of mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, DEA will publish in the Federal Register a notice of proposed rulemaking, which will give interested members of the public an additional opportunity to submit comments and request a hearing.[4] As provided in 21 U.S.C. 811(a), permanent scheduling rules shall be made on the record after opportunity for a hearing pursuant to the rulemaking procedures prescribed by 5 U.S.C. 553, 556, and 557.

Temporary Scheduling Process: The pendency of permanent scheduling proceedings for a substance does not preclude a simultaneous or subsequent order to temporarily control that substance. If DEA finds in light of FDA's scientific and medical evaluation and after consideration of all public

[1] The Attorney General has delegated her functions under the CSA to the DEA Administrator.

[2] Section 811(b) provides that the scientific and medical evaluation and scheduling recommendation shall be conducted by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS). This function has been delegated to the Assistant Secretary for Health. 58 FR 35460 (1993). Within HHS, the FDA has primary responsibility for conducting the evaluation and making the recommendation.

[3] Under some state and local laws, kratom and/or its constituents mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine are currently listed as controlled substances or otherwise subject to control. Nothing in this publication alters the validity of such laws, or any pending state efforts to implement those laws or enact new laws controlling these substances.

[4] In permanent scheduling actions, when DEA reviews the FDA evaluation and scheduling recommendation, the FDA determinations as to scientific and medical matters are binding on DEA. 21 U.S.C. 811(b).

comments and other relevant information that, based on the criteria of section 811(h), temporary placement of mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine in schedule I is necessary to avoid an imminent hazard to the public safety, DEA will follow the statutory procedures for issuing such a temporary scheduling order. As indicated above, before issuing such a temporary scheduling order, DEA would be required to publish in the Federal Register a new notice of intent.

Dated: October 6, 2016.

Acting Administrator.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Background

This document contains proposed regulations that would amend § 300.3 of the User Fee Regulations (26 CFR part 300), which provides for a user fee applicable to offers in compromise under section 7122 of the Internal Revenue Code (Code).

Section 7122(a) provides the Secretary the authority to compromise any civil or criminal case arising under the internal revenue laws, prior to the referral of that case to the Department of Justice. Section 7122(d)(1) requires the IRS to prescribe guidelines for officers and employees of the IRS to determine whether an offer in compromise is adequate and should be accepted to resolve a dispute. Those guidelines can generally be found in § 301.7122–1. Under those guidelines, an offer in compromise may be accepted if there is doubt as to liability, if there is doubt as to collectability, or if acceptance will promote effective tax administration. See § 301.7122–1(b).

When the IRS receives an offer in compromise, it initially determines whether the taxpayer submitting the offer is eligible for the offer in compromise program and, if the taxpayer is eligible, whether the offer submitted is otherwise processable. Currently, a taxpayer may be ineligible for the offer in compromise program for a number of reasons, including if the taxpayer is in bankruptcy or has not filed all required tax returns. The IRS will return an offer as nonprocessable if the taxpayer is ineligible or if the offer has not been properly submitted.

If the IRS determines the offer in compromise is processable, then except where the offer is made under section 7122(d)(3)(B) relating only to issues of liability and the case is processed without a financial investigation, the IRS investigates and verifies the taxpayer's financial information submitted with the offer to determine whether such a compromise is appropriate before accepting the terms of the offer in compromise. If the IRS initially rejects a processable offer in compromise based on an investigation of the taxpayer's financial position, section 7122(e)(1) provides that the IRS must conduct an independent administrative review of that decision before communicating the rejection to the taxpayer. If the independent administrative review upholds the IRS's initial decision to reject a processable offer in compromise, section 7122(e)(2) provides that the taxpayer is notified of the rejection and has the right to appeal the rejection to the IRS's Appeals Office. When the IRS accepts an offer in compromise, the IRS processes the payments and monitors the taxpayer's compliance with the terms of the offer.

Under § 300.3, the IRS currently charges $186 for processing an offer in compromise, which includes reviewing and monitoring the offer. Under § 300.3(b)(2)(i) and (ii), if a fee is charged and the offer is accepted to promote effective tax administration or accepted based on doubt as to collectability where the IRS has determined that collection of an amount greater than the amount offered would create economic hardship, then the user fee is applied against the amount to be paid under the offer unless the taxpayer requests that it be refunded. Section 300.3(b)(1)(i) and (ii) provide that no fee is charged if an offer is based solely on doubt as to liability, or made by a low-income taxpayer.

Explanation of Provisions

A. Overview

To bring the user fee rate for offers in compromise closer to the full cost to the IRS of providing this taxpayer specific service, the proposed regulations under § 300.3 would increase the user fee for an offer in compromise to $300. The proposed regulations do not modify other portions of the User Fee Regulations regarding offers in compromise, such as § 300.3(b)(1)(i) and (ii) which waive the user fee for offers in compromise submitted by low-income taxpayers and offers in compromise based solely on doubt as to liability. The increased user fee for offers in compromise is proposed to be effective for offers submitted on or after February 27, 2017.

The Honorable Uttam Dhillon
Acting Administrator
Drug Enforcement Administration
U.S. Department of Justice

Springfield, VA 22152

Dear Mr. Dhillon:

Pursuant to the Controlled Substances Act (CSA), 21 U.S.C. § 811, I am rescinding our prior recommendation dated October 17, 2017, that the substances mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine be permanently controlled in Schedule I of the CSA. HHS is instead recommending that mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine not be controlled at this time, either temporarily or permanently, until scientific research can sufficiently support such an action. Mitragynine and 7-OH-mitragynine are two of the constituents of the plant Mitragyna speciosa (M. speciosa), commonly referred to as kratom. This decision is based on many factors, in part on new data, and in part on the relative lack of evidence, combined with an unknown and potentially substantial risk to public health if these chemicals were scheduled at this time. Further research, which I am proposing be undertaken, should provide additional data to better inform any subsequent scheduling decision.

Procedural History

On August 31, 2016, the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) issued a Notice of Intent to temporarily schedule the chemicals mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine into Schedule I pursuant to the temporary scheduling provisions of the CSA, 21 U.S.C. § 811(h). See, 81 Fed. Reg. 59,929 (Aug. 31, 2016). In response to the Notice of Intent, the DEA received numerous comments from the public on mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, including comments offering their opinions regarding the pharmacological effects of these substances. To allow consideration of these comments, as well as others received on or before December 1, 2016, the DEA issued a Withdrawal of Notice of Intent and Solicitation of Comments on October 31, 2016.

On October 17, 2017, the then-Acting Assistant Secretary for Health of HHS wrote to then-Acting Administrator of the DEA to indicate that HHS was recommending that the substances mitragynine and 7-OH-mitragynine be permanently controlled in Schedule I of the Controlled Substances Act. Recently, I became aware of DEA's intent to schedule mitragynine and 7-OH-mitragynine - into Schedule I.

Analysis

The Controlled Substances Act ("CSA") provides in pertinent part that the Attorney General may by rule add to Schedule I any drug or other substance if the Attorney General makes the findings prescribed by subsection (b) of section 812 of the CSA for Schedule I. See, 21 U.S.C. § 811(a). Such findings are:

1. The drug or other substance has a high potential for abuse.
2. The drug or other substance has no currently accepted medical use in treatment in the United States.
3. There is a lack of accepted safety or use of the drug or other substance under medical supervision.

The CSA requires that "[i]n making any finding under subsection (a) of this section or under subsection (b) of section 812 of this title, the Attorney General shall consider the following factors with respect to each drug or other substance proposed to be controlled or removed from the schedules:

(1) Its actual or relative potential for abuse.
(2) Scientific evidence of its pharmacological effect, if known.
(3) The state of current scientific knowledge regarding the drug or other substance.
(4) Its history and current pattern of abuse.
(5) The scope, duration, and significance of abuse.
(6) What, if any, risk there is to the public health.
(7) Its psychic or physiological dependence liability.
(8) Whether the substance is an immediate precursor of a substance already controlled under this subchapter."

21 U.S.C. § 811(c).

Before scheduling a substance, though, the Attorney General must "request from the Secretary (of HHS) a scientific and medical evaluation, and his recommendation, as to whether such drug or other substance should be so controlled or removed as a controlled substance." Id. at § 811(b). The Secretary's evaluation should be based on factors (2), (3), (6), (7), and (8), noted above, and the scientific and medical considerations involved in factors (1), (4), and (5). Moreover, the "recommendation of the Secretary to the Attorney General shall be binding on the Attorney General as to such scientific and medical matters, and if the Secretary recommends that a drug or other substance not be controlled, the Attorney General shall not control the drug or other substance." Id.

The Secretary has delegated to the Assistant Secretary for Health, in consultation with the National Institute on Drug Abuse and the Food and Drug Administration, the responsibility to make a recommendation under the CSA to the Attorney General. On October 17, 2017, my predecessor, the Acting Assistant Secretary for Health, forwarded to you his recommendation that mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine be permanently controlled in Schedule I of the CSA. The recommendation included a scientific and medical evaluation prepared by the FDA of the eight factors determinative of control under the CSA. The FDA evaluation also recommended in favor of the three findings that are required for DEA to place a substance in Schedule I.

I have reviewed the Acting Assistant Secretary's earlier recommendation as well as previous and new scientific data. In light of this review, combined with concerns for unintended public health consequences, I now conclude that while mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine have many properties of an opioid, scheduling these chemicals at this time in light of the underdeveloped state of the science would be premature. For example, one recently published peer reviewed animal study indicated that mitragynine does not have abuse potential and actually reduced morphine intake. As such, these new data suggest that mitragynine does not satisfy the first of the three statutory requisites for Schedule I, irrespective of broader considerations of public health. While a single study is rarely dispositive, it strongly suggests that further evaluation is warranted.

Although there remains cause for concern for 7-hydroxymitragynine and potentially mitragynine, the level of scientific data and analysis presented by the FDA and available in the literature do not meet the criteria for inclusion of kratom or its chemical components in Schedule I of the CSA at this time. There is still debate among reputable scientists over whether kratom by itself is associated with fatal overdoses. Further analysis and public input regarding kratom and its chemical components are needed before any scheduling should be undertaken. It is important that we have additional information to justify scheduling, such as:[1]

- A scientific assessment of how many Americans utilize kratom, and an understanding of the geographic and demographic distribution of these users (Factors 4, 5);
- A scientific assessment of the actual scale and degree of dependence and/or addiction of Americans utilizing kratom (Factors 1, 5, 7);
- A scientific determination based on data whether kratom actually serves as a gateway drug that promotes further use of more dangerous opioids (Factors 1, 4, 5);
- A valid prediction of how many kratom users will suffer adverse consequences if kratom is no longer available, including:
    - Intractable pain, psychological distress, risk for suicide;
    - Transition to proven deadly opioids such as prescription opioids, heroin, or fentanyl; and
    - Transition to other potent or harmful drugs (Factor 6);
- A scientifically valid assessment of causality in the current few deaths in which kratom was co-utilized with known lethal drugs such as fentanyl (Factors 1, 2, 3, 5 & 6).

Furthermore, there is a significant risk of immediate adverse public health consequences for potentially millions of users if kratom or its components are included in Schedule I, such as:

[1] I am also concerned about the impact of scheduling kratom on our ability to conduct research, especially survey research and our currently inability to routinely test for kratom in those brought into an emergency room as a result of a possible overdose.

- Suffering with intractable pain;
- Kratom users switching to highly lethal opioids, including potent and deadly prescription opioids, heroin, and/or fentanyl, risking thousands of deaths from overdoses and infectious diseases associated with IV drug use;
- Inhibition of patients discussing kratom use with their primary care physicians leading to more harm, and enhancement of stigma thereby decreasing desire for treatment, because of individual users now being guilty of a crime by virtue of their possession or use of kratom
- The stifling effect of classification in Schedule I on critical research needed on the complex and potentially useful chemistry of components of kratom.

Therefore, I conclude at the current time, available evidence does not support mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine being controlled in Schedule I of the Controlled Substances Act. This assessment supersedes the previous recommendation letter from Acting Assistant Secretary Wright dated October 17, 2017. In the meantime, it is recognized that kratom may potentially have harmful effects, especially in specific circumstances and/or when used with potent prescription or illicit drugs.

Finally, it is entirely possible that new data and evidence could support scheduling of chemicals in kratom at some future time. Kratom may have harmful effects, particularly when used with other drugs. As such, I encourage continued enforcement by the FDA against unproven claims by kratom manufacturers. I also support enhanced public awareness that kratom contains molecules that may potentially be dangerous. I also plan to work expeditiously with colleagues throughout the U.S. government to seek transparent public and scientific input, and to collect data on the critical public health considerations outlined above.

Should you have any questions regarding this recommendation, please contact my office at (202) 690-7694.

Sincerely yours,

Executive Summary

Kratom is the common term for Mitragyna speciosa, a tree native to Southeast Asia. The kratom leaf contains more than 50 alkaloids. The two main known psychoactive compounds in kratom leaf are the indole alkaloids mitragynine, comprising up to two-thirds of the alkaloid content, and 7-hydroxymitragynine, which comprises about 1% of alkaloid content and is also formed by metabolism of mitragynine in vivo. Several total synthesis of mitragynine have been developed, but require too many steps and provide the final product in very low yields. Hence, extraction of the compound seems to be more convenient. 7-Hydroxymitragynine can also be obtained from mitragynine by a single step chemical reaction. M. speciosa can be identified macroscopically by examining the leaf, although this analysis can be misleading as the leaves from plants of the same tribe or genus are very similar. Numerous analytical methods have been reported in the literature for the identification and quantification of kratom alkaloids, particularly mitragynine, in a wide range of samples, including commercial samples, raw plant material and biological specimens. The most applied methods include chromatographic techniques coupled to either spectrophotometric or mass spectrometric detectors.

Indigenous populations have used kratom products for centuries as herbal medicine to treat various medical conditions (especially pain and opioid withdrawal), to enhance sociability, and to increase energy and reduce fatigue (especially among manual workers). Lower doses reportedly have stimulant-like effects, while higher doses have opioid-like effects. Kratom use is almost exclusively oral, typically by chewing the leaves, ingesting powdered leaf, or drinking a kratom tea or decoction (Southeast Asia) or by ingesting powdered leaf as a capsule or pill or dissolved in a beverage (US, Western Europe). Processed kratom products sold commercially often contain other compounds.

Kratom is not currently controlled under the UN conventions. Some countries ban kratom or limit its use for human consumption. The Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) bans kratom in herbal medicine or dietary supplements, but allows cultivation of the tree. Kratom is legal in the United States at the federal level, but is considered a drug of concern by the US Drug Enforcement Administration.

Kratom is almost always taken orally. In Southeast Asia, typical formulations include raw or powdered leaves or liquid leaf-extracts (tea or decoction). Kratom decoction is often mixed with another beverage to create a kratom “cocktail.” In the United States and Western Europe, common formulations include leaf powders taken as a tablet or capsule or dissolved in a beverage. Mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine have been found in resins and liquids sold online for use in electronic drug delivery devices (so-called “e-cigarettes”).

In the absence of accurate labeling of kratom products, it is impossible to know the actual doses of kratom alkaloids ingested by kratom users. Surveys of convenience samples of kratom users in Southeast Asia suggest that a typical daily dose of liquid formulations is 3-6 glasses/day, containing an estimated 200-400 mg of mitragynine. Surveys of convenience samples of US kratom users suggest that a typical daily dose of powder formulations is 2-6 g/day, although heavy users may ingest up to 20 g/day.

The pharmacokinetic parameters of oral mitragynine in rats, when given as the isolated alkaloid, are T_{max} of 1.3-4.5 hours, C_{max} of 400-700 ng/mL, half-life of 3.3-9.4 hours, and oral bioavailability of 3%-17%; when given as lyophilized kratom tea or organic extract of kratom tea, T_{max} of 0.3 or 1.0 hours, respectively, C_{max} of 0.55 and 0.66 ng/mL, respectively, and oral bioavailability of 25.1% and 31.2%, respectively. The pharmacokinetic parameters of isolated oral mitragynine in beagle dogs are T_{max} of 0.3 hours, C_{max} of 278 (±47) ng/mL , half-life of 8.7 (±0.2) hours, and bioavailability of 69.6%.

We are aware of two published studies of humans administered controlled doses of kratom products (decoction, tea), involving 36 young adult men in Southeast Asia who used kratom daily. Pharmacokinetic parameters were T_{max} 0.84 (±0.35) hours and 2.0 (± 0.8) hours, C_{max} 50-100 ng/mL and 1884 (± 1056) ng/mL, and half-life 23 (± 16) hours. There are currently no human data on the oral bioavailability of mitragynine or 7-OH-mitragynine, either alone or as part of a kratom product. Given this lack of knowledge, and the known variability in oral bioavailability between rodents and beagle dogs, it is impossible to accurately extrapolate to humans from the animal dosing of kratom and kratom alkaloids. We are not aware of any in vivo human studies on the metabolism of kratom alkaloids or kratom-drug interactions. Mitragynine inhibits activity of some human liver cytochrome P450 enzymes in liver cells in vitro and enhances the activity of others. These findings raise the potential for clinically significant kratom-drug interaction in human kratom users.

Mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine act as partial agonists at the mu-opioid receptor (mOR). 7-Hydroxmitragynine has 5-23 times more binding affinity and 5-20 times more intrinsic activity (receptor activation) than does mitragynine. For comparison, morphine has 8-10 times more binding affinity and 3 times more intrinsic activity than does 7-OH-mitragynine. Activation of the mu-opioid receptor is considered responsible for most of the pharmacological effects of kratom alkaloids. Kratom alkaloids are biased mOR agonists in that they activate the G-protein coupled intracellular pathway but not the beta-arrestin pathway. This may confer some selectivity in producing analgesia with less respiratory depression or physical dependence. Kratom alkaloids also act as competitive antagonists at the kappa- and delta-opioid receptors, but with lesser potency. Mitragynine binds to alpha1- and alpha2-adrenergic receptors, serotonin-1A and -2A receptors, and the dopamine D1 receptor. The functional significance of such binding is unknown.

Extracts of the kratom leaf , mitragynine, and 7-hydroxymitragynine have a variety of behavioral effects in rodents after oral or intraperitoneal administration. Extrapolating these findings to humans is uncertain because of potential species differences in pharmacokinetics, especially oral bioavailability. Most studies focus on the opioid-like effects, including analgesia, slowed gastrointestinal transit, development of naloxone-precipitated opioid-like withdrawal symptoms (but not spontaneous withdrawal symptoms) after repeated daily (at least 4-5 days) dosing, and suppression of naloxone-precipitated opioid withdrawal. Repeated daily dosing (at least 4-5 days) produces tolerance to the opioid-like effects and cross-tolerance with opioids.

Kratom and kratom alkaloids have inconsistent effects in rodent models of reward. Like morphine, kratom and mitragynine have rewarding effects in conditioned place preference. Unlike morphine, they do not support drug self-administration.Mitragyinine has no effect on intracranial self-stimulation ICSS) , while 7-OH-mitragynine had no effect in one study and lowered ICSS threshold (rewarding) in another study. Rats distinguish mitragynine from saline, but not from morphine. One study found that kratom methanolic extract did not increase dopamine concentration in the mouse brain nucleus accumbens. Such increases are produced by almost all substances abused by humans, including opioids.

Kratom and mitragynine have little or no effect on motor activity and sleep in rodents, but reduce opioid and alcohol self-administration and withdrawal and improve behavior in rodent models of anti-depressant and anti-psychotic action.

Acute and chronic (up to 6 weeks) studies in rodents, dogs, and cats show little toxicity from mitragynine or 7-hydroxymitragynine at oral or i.p. doses below 50 mg/kg, except for reduced food and water intake and weight loss. Higher doses produce respiratory suppression, liver damage, and seizures. The mitragynine oral LD50 is around 500 mg/kg in mice and >800 mg/kg in rats. For comparison, the oral LD50 of mitragynine is 600 mg/kg in mice and 461 mg/kg in rats. The oral bioavailability of mitragynine in humans is unknown, so extrapolation from rodent to human doses is uncertain.

Recent large, nationally representative epidemiological surveys in Thailand (2017) and the US (2019) suggest that 2-3% and 0.7%, respectively, of the adolescent/adult population are past-year users of kratom. There are little other good-quality data on the epidemiology of kratom use and kratom use disorder. Most data come from online surveys of self-selected convenience samples of adult kratom users. One such 2017 survey in the US found that 12.3% of respondents met DSM-5 criteria for past-year kratom use disorder. Cross-sectional surveys in Southeast Asia and the US find that up to one-half to three-quarters of chronic daily kratom users report difficulty in stopping their kratom use and experience opioid-like withdrawal symptoms when they do stop, occurring within 48 hours of stopping. However, few such kratom users report psychosocial or medical problems from their use. Case reports of kratom users seeking medical attention for kratom withdrawal find use patterns of up to 15-20 g daily of kratom products.

There are only three small published clinical studies on the human pharmacology of oral kratom products (tea, decoction, or extract) involving a total of 41 young adult men. One study of 26 chronic kratom users in Malaysia found that mitragynine (1.6 mg/kg in the form of kratom decoction) doubled pain tolerance in the cold pressor test about one hour after ingestion. A third study of five kratom-naïve British adults found that kratom extract reduced pain-sensitivity. All three studies reported only transient, clinically insignificant adverse effects.

Kratom can produce serious toxicity in high-dose users, but the number of cases is probably low as a proportion of the total number of users. More than 300 deaths associated with kratom have been reported since 2010, the vast majority since 2015 and almost all in the US and Western Europe. Attributing causality to kratom can be difficult, as most cases involve multiple substances and few cases involved comprehensive toxicology to detect other substances. In one large case series, 23% of deaths had no other substances identified or considered contributory. In some smaller case series that had intensive forensic investigation, no kratom-associated deaths are found to be caused by kratom. In addition, there is no association between mitragynine concentrations in post-mortem blood and likelihood of a death being considered caused by kratom. At least 92 cases of kratom-associated liver toxicity have been reported. These usually resolve after cessation of kratom use; only one case required liver transplantation. Among the 3,484 kratom-associated cases reported to the US National Poison Data System from 2014-2019, in 63% kratom was the only identified substance. Among these, only 0.8% were considered medically serious (including death). The major toxicities were neuropsychiatric (agitation, confusion, sedation, hallucinations, tremor, seizure, coma) 75.4%, cardiovascular (tachycardia hypertension) 44.5%, gastrointestinal (abdominal pain, nausea, vomiting) 25.2%, and respiratory (respiratory depression) 12.1%. Small cross-sectional studies of chronic kratom users in Southeast Asia find no evidence of clinically significant cardiac, renal, or hematological abnormalities. A study comparing kratom-associated poison control center reports in the US and Thailand from 2010-2017 found similar types of adverse events in both countries. Medical severity was significantly greater in the US, although Thailand had a greater prevalence of cases with other substances mentioned.

Surveys of convenience samples of kratom users in Southeast Asia and the US find that the vast majority report using kratom to self-medicate pain, opioid withdrawal or opioid use disorder, anxiety, or depression, rather than for recreational purposes. This anecdotal evidence, plus some of the potentially beneficial behavioral effects seen in rodent studies, have generated proposals to develop kratom or its alkaloids as medication for such disorders.

D. Trade Names

KRATOM

M. speciosa is available online and in shops that sell equipment for smoking cannabis and tobacco ('head shops') and the derived products are often distinguished according to vein color, "provenance" (origin) and potency. Three kinds of kratom with varying leaves and potency have been described, for example, red veined (called "Kan daeng" in Thai), white veined (known as "Tang gua") and a third kind 'Yak yai', which have two small teeth-like formations near the apex of the leaf (Suwanlert, 1975)(Sukrong et al., 2007).

Several further types of kratom are present online with the following names (Raffa, 2014):

Premium kratom

Commercial grade kratom

Enhanced Bali kratom

Ultra enhanced Indo (U.E.I.) kratom

Indo red vein, Malaysian kratom

Red vein Thai kratom

Green- or white-vein Thai kratom

Maeng Da kratom

White-veined Borneo kratom

New Guinea kratom

Java kratom

Sumatra red

The Rifat strain

The bumblebee strain

Red Riau

Green Riau.

According to other studies, the "strain" of kratom reporting the vein color actually corresponds to the leaf age (Braley and Hondrogiannis, 2020). For example, the red vein "strain" is younger and more potent compared to the mature green vein "strain", grows more abundantly in Southeast Asia and is slightly more persistent than other M. speciosa trees. The red-vein "strain" is marketed with several names including (Kratomgardens):

Borneo Red
Red Vein Sumatra
Pontianak Red Horn
Red Thai.

White vein kratom is known as (Kratomgardens):
White Vein Sumatra
Borneo White
Pontianak White Horn.

The green vein is described as a mix of the red and the white type and is called Malaysian Green or Pontianak Green Horn (Kratomgardens).

Todd et al. investigated the chemical composition of over 50 commercial kratom products, all with different names, belonging to the red, white and green vein "strains" (Todd et al., 2020).

E. Street Names

Kratom is the common term used for the Mitragyna speciosa leaf and products derived from the leaf. Street names in Southeast Asia include krathom, kakuam, ithang or thom (Thailand), biak-biak or ketum (Malaysia), and mambog (Philippines). Kratom "cocktail" refers to a decoction of kratom leaves mixed with another beverage. In Germany, krypton refers to a mixture of kratom and O-demethyltramadol (Phillipp et al., 2011).

F. Physical Appearance

KRATOM

Marketed kratom products usually consist of light to dark green crushed or powdered dried leaves (EMCDDA, 2015). Moreover, vendors offer powdered, greenish or beige-brown preparations fortified with extracts from other leaves. Also, aqueous decoction of kratom leaves can be used to make paste-like extracts and dark brown kratom resin by partially or fully boiling down the water. Lastly, tinctures and capsules filled with powdered kratom are also supplied (EMCDDA, 2015).

Botanic description:

Kratom, commonly referred to Mitragyna speciosa (Korth.) Havil., is a tropical tree that grows in Thailand, Myanmar, Malaysia, Borneo, Sumatra, the Philippines, and New Guinea (Raffa, 2014). Mitragyna Korth. is a small genus of the Rubiaceae family. The genus Mitragyna belongs to the tribe Naucleeae of the subfamily Cinchonoideae (Razafimandimbison and Bremer, 2001).

The genus Mitragyna contains ten species, of which four species occur in Africa (M. inermis, M. ledermannii, M. rubrostipulata, and M. stipulosa), and six species in South and Southeast Asia, spread between India and New Guinea (M. speciosa, M. tubulosa, M. rotundifolia, M. parvifolia, M. hirsuta, and M. diversifolia).

The nomenclatures of M. speciosa have been changed by various authors over the years. First described by the Dutch botanist Pieter Willem Korthals (1807–1892) (Korthals, 1839), the genus was renamed and reclassified several times until George Darby Haviland gave the final name and classification in 1897 (Haviland, 1897).

M. speciosa is an evergreen tree that reaches 25-meter height and 0.6- to 0.9- meter diameter. It generally presents a straight trunk, a smooth and gray outer bark and a pinkish inner bark (Raffa, 2014). The petiolate leaves are generally dark glossy and green in color and elliptical in shape., and; they can reach 14-20 cm in length and 7-12 cm in width. They typically present 12-17 pairs of veins. The flowers are arranged in groups of three heads, one with a short peduncle head between two heads with longer peduncle. The heads have a diameter of 1.5-2.5 cm with a light hairy interfloral 4-6 mm long bracts. The flower calyx is about 2 mm long with 5 lobes. The corolla appears as funnel-shaped with an intense yellow color. The corolla tube measures 3.5-5 mm, while the corolla lobes are 2.5-3 mm long and hairless with a revolute margin and a distinct ring of hairs within the base of the lobes.

The fruiting heads are 2-3 cm wide, with 10 ribbed fruits of 7-9 mm length and 4-5 mm width. They contain numerous flat seeds, which are about 1 mm long with a 1-2 mm paper wing at each end (Raffa, 2014, Haviland, 1897, Ridley, 1923).

Synonyms for Mitragyna speciosa Korth. (Havil.) (Raffa, 2014):

Nauclea korthalsii Steud.; Nauclea luzoniensis Blanco; Nauclea speciosa (Korth.) Miq.; Stephegyne speciosa Korth.

Common names used for Mitragyna speciosa Korth. (Havil.) (Raffa, 2014):

G. WHO Review History

Kratom has not been formally reviewed by WHO and is not currently under international control. Kratom has been under ECDD surveillance due to country level reports of the abuse liability of its main psychoactive ingredient, mitragynine, and from international organization reports regarding reported fatalities. A pre-review was initiated following a proposal from an international organization with supporting information regarding fatalities due to kratom use.

MITRAGYNINE

The presence of three stereogenic centers and an E-Z isomerism in the double bond on the methoxy acrylate group lead to the possibility of 16 different stereoisomers. However, only four stereoisomers occur naturally in M. speciosa: mitragynine, which has the 3*S*,15*S*,20*S* configuration (1); speciociliatine 3*R*,15*S*,20*S* (2), speciogynine 3*S*,15*S*,20*R* (3), and mitraciliatine 3*R*,15*S*,20*R* (4) (Figure 1). The E- stereochemistry is always present in the double bond on the C-15 methoxy acrylate group in mitragynine stereoisomers isolated from M. speciosa (Ramanathan et al., 2021). Of these four stereoisomers, mitragynine (1) is the most abundant, reaching up to 66% of the total alkaloid content in kratom leaves, while speciociliatine (2) and speciogynine (3), combined together, account for an average of 8-9%. Mitraciliatine (4) is the least abundant, with less than 1% of the total alkaloid content (Ramanathan et al., 2021)(Figure 1).

7-HYDROXYMITRAGYNINE

The presence of four stereogenic centers and an E-Z isomerism in the double bond on the methoxy acrylate group generate 32 potential stereoisomers, but only three are found in M. speciosa: 7-hydroxymitragynine, which has the 3*S*,7*S*,15*S*,20*S* configuration (5), 7-hydroxyspeciociliatine 3*R*,7*R*,15*S*,20*S* (6), and 7-hydroxymitraciliatine 3*R*,7*R*,15*S*,20*R* (7), all presenting the S- configuration and the E- stereochemistry in the double bond on the C-15 methoxy acrylate group (Ramanathan et al., 2021).

D. Methods and Ease of Illicit Manufacturing

KRATOM

Chemical composition

Most studies of the chemical composition of Kratom are focused on the alkaloids resulting in the isolation of at least 54 alkaloids from the plant (Flores-Bocanegra et al., 2020). Other secondary metabolites like flavonoids, terpenoid saponins, polyphenols, and glycosides have also been isolated or identified in kratom. The main psychoactive components, which are exclusive of Mitragyna speciosa, are mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine and are found in the leaves.

The total alkaloid content in dried leaves ranges from 0.5-1.5 %. The most abundant compounds are represented by indoles, mainly of the corynanthe type, which can be found in tetra- or penta-cyclic rings. Hydroxy or methoxy group at C-9, unsaturation at C-3, C-5, or C-18, hydroxylation at C-7, and various configurations at C-3, C-7, and/or C-20 can be encountered in indole and oxindole alkaloids (Flores-Bocanegra et al., 2020).

Mitragynine (1) is the major alkaloid in the kratom plant, reaching up to 66% of the total alkaloid content, and was initially isolated by Field in 1921 (Field, 1921), but only in 1965 its structure was definitely elucidated (Ramanathan et al., 2021, Beckett et al., 2009) and the absolute stereochemistry confirmed by X-ray crystallographic analysis. It is reported that its concentration varies according to plant organ and origin, but also to genetic and morphogenetic factors, plant defense system against pathogenic attacks, light, UV exposure, moisture, temperature, soil microorganisms, soil fertility, salinity, storage conditions (Brown et al., 2017, Tanko et al., 2005).

Mitragynine presents the corynanthe-type skeleton with a tetracyclic tetrahydro-β-carboline, four-cycles with a methoxyl substitution at C-9, an ethyl group at C-20, and a β-methoxy acrylate moiety at C-15 (Tong et al., 2019).

Paynantheine is described as the second major alkaloid accounting for 10% of the total alkaloid content. On average, 7α-hydroxymitragynine(5) (Figure 2),makes up less than 2% of the alkaloid content (Kruegel et al., 2019).

Oxindole alkaloids are biosynthesized from indole alkaloids through an oxidative rearrangement (Lopes et al., 2019). They are found in Mitragyna species and other Rubiaceae species such as Uncaria (Heitzman et al., 2005).

The presence of fungi or bacteria can affect the presence and concentration of alkaloids within the plant. For example, M. speciosa root cultures infected with Agrobacterium rhizogenes generated more mitragynine than not infected plants (Phongprueksapattana et al., 2008). Another reported spirocyclic oxindole is the mitragynine pseudoindoxyl, which is a major transformation product when the fungus Helminthosporium sp. feeds upon mitragynine (Yamamoto et al., 1999).

Flavonoids and flavonols have been also identified in M. speciosa leaves, including apigenin and its 7-glycosides, along with quercetin and its glycosides (quercitrin, rutin, isoquercitrin, hyperoside, and quercetin-3-galactoside-7-rhamnoside, kaempferol, and its 3-glucoside derivative, and epicatechin). Other phenolic compounds include caffeic acid and chlorogenic acid, 1-O-feruloyl-β-D-glucopyranoside and benzyl-β-D-glucopyranoside (Raffa, 2014, Hinou and Harvala, 1988).

Sitosterol, stigmasterol, and daucosterol are phytosterols that are reported in M. speciosa (Phongprueksapattana et al., 2008).

The leaves of M. speciosa also contain the monoterpenes 3-oxo-α-ionyl-O-β-D-glucopyranoside and roseoside and secoiridoid glycosides such as vogeloside and epivogeloside (Raffa, 2014).

Adulteration

Preparation of kratom products intended for sale can involve adulteration of the original material. In2011 it was reported that products were sold in Germany and Sweden under the name 'Krypton', which were 'enhanced' kratom preparations containing caffeine and synthetic O-desmethyltramadol (ODT)(EMCDDA, 2015, Arndt et al., 2011, Kronstrand et al., 2011).

In 2016 a research article reported concentrations of 7-hydroxymitragynine suspiciously much higher than those found in raw M. speciosa leaves in several commercial Kratom products suggesting likely artificial addition of this compound (Lydecker et al., 2016).

Alkaloid extraction

Alkaloids from Mitragyna are generally extracted from raw material by methanol, ethanol or 2-propanol), alcohol-chloroform mixture or alcohol–water mixture by maceration, sonication, or the Soxhlet technique. The crude extract undergoes an acid-base purification to yield the alkaloid fraction (Raffa, 2014, Chan et al., 2005).

Other techniques employed are ultrasound-assisted extraction, microwave-assisted extraction, and supercritical carbon-dioxide extraction, which show an increased yield in alkaloids extraction compared to other techniques (Orio et al., 2012).

MITRAGYNINE

Several total syntheses of mitragynine (1) (Figure 1) have been developed (Takayama et al., 1995) (Ma et al., 2009) (Sun and Ma, 2011) (Kerschgens et al., 2012) (Kruegel et al., 2016), but are too complex to be used for economic production of this alkaloid (EMCDDA, 2015). These reported total syntheses require too many steps and provide the final product in very low yields. Moreover, they can be performed only in well-equipped chemical laboratories by well trained personnel. According to the literature records, extraction of the compound seems to be more convenient.

7-HYDROXYMITRAGYNINE

7-hydroxymitragynine can be obtained from mitragynine by a single step chemical reaction. In 2002 Takayama et al. reported that the treatment of mitragynine with lead tetraacetate .and subsequent alkaline hydrolysis led to 7-hydroxy-7*H*-mitragynine in good yield (Takayama et al., 2002).

In 2016 Kruegel et al. reported that mitragynine was easily oxidized to 7-hydroxymitragynine (7-OH) employing the hypervalent iodine species [bis(trifluoroacetoxy)iodo]benzene (PIFA), or by irradiation with visible light in the presence of rose bengal, under air or pure O2 atmosphere (Kruegel et al., 2016). Interestingly, it was also found that room temperature and sunlight cause the conversion of mitragynine into its 7-hydroxy derivative, with no need for the addition of an external agent, albeit in low yield (8% by NMR) (Kruegel et al., 2016). Therefore, it is conceivable that a similar process occurs in the plant itself, or more likely, in dry leaf material that has been exposed to air for prolonged time, with strongly colored phytochemicals (e.g., porphyrins) serving as a substitute for rose bengal. This phenomenon may account for the observation of 7-OH in some samples of Mitragyna speciosa. In 2019 Kruegel et al. reported that also singlet oxygen and potassium peroxymonosulfate (Oxone) were effective oxidants for the conversion of mitragynine into 7-hydroxymitragynine (Kruegel et al., 2019).

Stability of kratom alkaloids

Recently, Basiliere and Kerrigan reported the short-term stability of mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine, speciociliatine, speciogynine and paynantheine over a range of pH (2-10) and temperature (4-80 °C) over 8 hours (Basiliere and Kerrigan, 2020b). All of the Mitragyna alkaloids studied were acid labile. Hydrolysis of the methyl ester occurs under alkaline conditions to produce 16-carboxymitragynine. 7-hydroxymitragynine is reported to be the most unstable alkaloid studied, with significant drug loss after 8 hours at 40 °C and above. No significant drug losses were observed for mitragynine in aqueous solution (pH 2-10) at 4, 20 or 40 °C. Diastereoisomers of mitragynine (speciociliatine and speciogynine) demonstrated even greater stability (Ponglux et al., 1977, Lersten and Horner, 2011).

F. Identification and Analysis

KRATOM

Botanical identification of Kratom

M. speciosa can be identified macroscopically by examining the leaf, which is elliptic to ovate, with the apex shortly pointed and the base rounded to cordate (Ramanathan et al., 2021). However, macroscopic identification can be misleading as the leaves from plants of the same tribe or genus such as Uncaria homomalla and M. diversifolia are very similar (Ramanathan et al., 2021) (Brown et al., 2017, Ponglux et al., 1977). Therefore, a chemical analysis can be resolutive.

Microscopic identification of eight Mitragyna species (but not M. speciosa) was reported by examination of calcium oxalate crystals concretions but these studies were based on limited samples (Lersten and Horner, 2011).

In 2007 Sukrong et al. showed that sequences from the nuclear internal transcribed spacer region can be used to differentiate M. speciosa from related species by the polymerase chain reaction-restriction fragment length polymorphism (PCR-RFLP) method (Sukrong et al., 2007).

Recently, a highly specific and selective assay based on DNA bar coding was reported for the detection of kratom products. The assay employs the matK nucleotide signature site as a marker for the discrimination of M. speciosa from other mitragyna species (Jaipaew et al., 2018).

In 2021, a DNA bar coding combined with high-resolution melting (Bar-HRM) analysis method was developed to differentiate M. speciosa from other related Mitragyna species. The authors proposed the Bar-HRM analysis as a simple method for the investigation of M. speciosa to be used in routine forensic analysis (Tungphatthong et al., 2021).

Chemical analysis of kratom

Numerous analytical methods have been reported in the literature for the identification and quantification of kratom alkaloids, particularly mitragynine, in a wide range of samples, including commercial samples, raw plant material and biological specimens. Commercial standards of mitragynine and its stereoisomers speciogynine, mitraciliatine, speciociliatine, its hydroxylate derivative 7-hydroxymitragynine, as well as deuterated mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, are available. Some other indole and oxindole kratom alkaloids are sold as analytical standards, although Flores-Bocanegra et al. reported that in some cases pure commercial standards turned out to be either mixtures or even a completely different compound (Flores-Bocanegra et al., 2020).

Chromatographic methods, and in particular liquid chromatography, are the most commonly employed for the analysis of M. speciosa alkaloids. A detailed description of the analytical methods is provided below according to the technique chosen.

Thin Layer chromatography (TLC)

Kratom alkaloids can be separated by TLC on silica gel plates and detected under a UV lamp (254 nm). A mobile phase composed of hexane/ethyl acetate/25% ammonia solution (30:15:1, v/v/v) provides an Rf value of mitragynine of 0.49 (Kowalczuk et al., 2013). Spraying with either modified Ehrlich's reagent or ferric chloride-perchloric acid reagent, mitragynine can be detected as purple or gray-to-brown spots, respectively (Lydecker et al., 2016).

Gas chromatography (GC)

The first GC method for the analysis of mitragynine in kratom was published in 2005 (Orio et al., 2012), but the identification of mitragynine was given only by comparison of experimental mass spectra with library spectra.

Philipp et al. in 2011 developed a GC-MS method for the analysis of kratom and/or Krypton in urine by trimethylsilylation to increase the volatility of the alkaloids (Philipp et al., 2011a).

Cornara et al. in 2013 described a GC-MS method for the analysis of underivatized mitragynine and other alkaloids in kratom (Cornara et al., 2013).

Wang et al. in 2014 compared three chromatographic methods coupled to two detection systems, GC with MS, supercritical fluid chromatography with diode array detection (DAD), and HPLC with MS and DAD, for the analysis of mitragynine and other structurally related alkaloids in M. speciosa plants (Wang et al., 2014). The authors concluded that the GC method was unable to resolve the two diasteroisomers mitragynine and speciociliatine, which also give identical electron impact mass spectra. This issue could be overcome only by applying derivatization. Moreover, there is the limitation of the temperature range available for method optimization.

Mohd et al. published a GC-MS method for the determination of mitragynine in three Malaysian M. speciosa samples employing ultrasonic assisted extraction (UAE) (Sanagi et al., 2013).

Basiliere et al. suggested that GC methods lacked overall sensitivity (limit of detection (LOD) of about 50 ng/mL), thus being unable to quantify the alkaloids in biological specimens (Basiliere et al., 2018).

Liquid chromatography (LC)

LC-UV

HPLC and UHPLC (ultrahigh) methods have proven to provide the highest accuracy in the discrimination of structurally similar kratom alkaloids (Ramanathan et al., 2021).

An HPLC-DAD method was developed to identify and quantify mitragynine, along with caffeine, codeine, chlorpheniramine and phenylephrine in a “kratom cocktail,” a drink prepared by mixing boiled kratom leaves, carbonated cola beverages, antitussive syrup, coffee, and codeine (Chittrakarn et al., 2012).

Parthasarathy et al. reported a HPLC-DAD method to quantify mitragynine from raw material (Parthasarathy et al., 2013).

Mudge et al. reported in 2017 an HPLC-UV validated method for the qualitative and quantitative analysis of mitragynine and 7α-hydroxymitragynine in solid and liquid commercial kratom products (Mudge and Brown, 2017).

Parthasarathy et al. reported in 2010 a solid phase extraction method for HPLC-UV etermination of mitragynine in rat plasma. The method had limit of quantification (LOQ) of 50 ng/mL (Parthasarathy et al., 2010).

Neng et al. developed an extraction method of mitragynine from human urine using a bar adsorptive microextraction, consisting of a modified N-vinylpyrrolidone polymer sorbent phase combined with liquid desorption and followed by analysis by HPLC-DAD (BAμE–LD/HPLC–DAD) (Neng et al., 2015).

LC-MS

Liquid chromatography-based methods are the most widely employed for the determination of kratom alkaloids as they allow for a good resolution of mitragynine isomers and have a high sensitivity, which is a key factor for the qualitative and quantitative determination of trace amounts of such compounds found in biological specimens. Since metabolites of mitragynine are not yet commercially available, the assessment of kratom use in forensic toxicology specimens is currently evaluated by the analysis of the parent drug and related alkaloids. As reported in a study of mitragynine concentrations in urine from fifty recreational kratom users, values covered a broad dynamic range (1-50,000 ng/mL) (Le et al., 2012). For forensic investigations, it is important to have analytical methods capable of detecting low ng/mL concentrations.

LC-MS methods were developed for the simultaneous determination of mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine, speciogynine, speciociliatine, and paynantheine in both raw material and commercial kratom products (Kikura-Hanajiri et al., 2009). Some methods are able to reach very high sensitivities up to 0.02 ng/mL and 0.1 ng/mL for the LOD and LOQ of mitragynine, respectively (Lu et al., 2009).

The LC technique was also coupled to low- and high-resolution mass spectrometry (LC-HRMS) to identify phase I and II metabolites of speciogynine in rat urine after the administration of a high dose of the pure alkaloid and in human urine after kratom use (Philipp et al., 2010a). The same method was applied to paynantheine (Philipp et al., 2010b), speciociliatine (Philipp et al., 2011b), mitraciliatine and isopaynantheine (Philipp et al., 2011c) and their metabolites in rat urine after administration of the pure alkaloids showing that they matched the metabolites detected in the urine of kratom users.

An LC-MS/MS method was able to detected O-desmethyltramadol besides kratom alkaloids in urine of a woman after consumption of “Krypton”, a mixture of kratom and O-desmethyltramadol (Arndt et al., 2011).

Mitragynine was also detected in post-mortem urine and blood samples by LC-MS/MS (Holler et al., 2011) after hydrolysis with glucuronidase and sulfatase and extraction with n-butyl chloride prior to analysis. The method was also applied to other specimens including liver, vitreous humor, kidney, spleen, lung, bile, and heart,) with the latter being the only specimen in which mitragynine was not detected.

A method using solid phase extraction (SPE) and LC-MS/MS to detect and quantify mitragynine, 16-carboxy mitragynine, and 9-O-demethyl mitragynine in human urine was also developed (Lee et al., 2018).

Recently, a simultaneous quantification in marketed products of 10 kratom alkaloids (corynantheidine, corynoxine, corynoxine B, 7-hydroxymitragynine, isocorynantheidine, mitragynine, mitraphylline, paynantheine, speciociliatine, and speciogynine) using an UHPLC MS-MS method was reported by the Avery group (Sharma et al., 2019). The LOQ was 1 ng/ml. The method was applied to the quantification of kratom alkaloids in alkaloid-rich fractions, ethanolic extracts, lyophilized teas, and commercial products. The most abundant alkaloids were mitragynine (0.7-38.7% w/w), paynantheine (0.3-12.8%), speciociliatine (0.4-12.3%), and speciogynine (0.1-5.3%). Minor kratom alkaloids like corynantheidine, corynoxine, corynoxine B, 7-hydroxymitragynine, isocorynantheidine were found in the range 0.01%-2.8% (w/w). However, mitraphylline was below the LOQ in all analyses. The same group also developed an HPLC method for the quantification of mitragynine in kratom leaf extracts and a multiple reaction mode based UPLC-MS/MS method for the quantification of the same alkaloid in rat plasma (Avery et al., 2019).

Speciociliatine and speciogynine were investigated as alternative biomarkers of kratom use in urine, as they often exceeded the concentration of mitragynine in unhydrolyzed urine (Basiliere and Kerrigan, 2020a).

Recently, a method for the detection of mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine with LC-MS/MS in hair samples with LOQs of 4 pg/mg and 30 pg/mg, respectively, was developed (Meier et al., 2020).

Supercritical fluid chromatography (SFC)

Three chromatographic techniques, GC-MS, SFC-DAD, and LC coupled either to DAD or MS, were compared for the analysis of the indole alkaloids paynantheine, 3-isopaynantheine, mitragynine, speciogynine, and speciociliatine, and the oxindole alkaloids corynoxine and corynoxine B in M. speciosa plants (Wang et al., 2014). LC and SFC were able to resolve the major components with slightly different elution orders. On the other hand, the GC method failed to resolve the diasteroisomers mitragynine and speciociliatine.

Capillary electrophoresis (CE)

Non-aqueous capillary electrophoresis (NACE) interfaced to an MS detector was successfully employed to separate a large number of diastereomeric compounds in alkaloid mixtures from a plant extract of M. speciosa (Posch et al., 2012). In this separation technique, background electrolytes often consist of a mixture of methanol and acetonitrile (ACN) with soluble ammonium salts added as electrolyte. Posch et al. used a mixture of glacial acetic acid and can, thus creating an acidic background electrolyte with a very low dielectric constant. The addition of ammonium formate as electrolyte and variation of the solvent ratio led to significant changes in selectivity and resolution necessary for the separation of structurally closely related indole alkaloids including diastereomers upon (Posch et al., 2012).

DART

A direct analysis in real time-mass spectrometry (DART-MS) method was developed by Lesiak et al. for the rapid identification of M. speciosa plant material and discrimination from other plants (Lesiak et al., 2014). Moreover, M. speciosa plant varieties were also analyzed and classified according to their chemical profile.

Fowble et al. developed DART-HRMS method for the quantification of mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine in 16 online commercially available kratom products (Fowble and Musah, 2019). The linear range was 5-100 µ/mL, the LOQ was 5 µg/mL, and the mitragynine concentrations in these samples ranged from 2.76 to 20.05 mg/g of dried plant material. The advantage of using a DART system lies in the straightforward analysis of raw plant material as such with no sample preparation steps (Fowble and Musah, 2019, Lesiak et al., 2014).

Ion mobility spectrometry (IMS)

Fuenffinger et al. developed an IMS method for the quantification of mitragynine in 15 commercial samples and compared the results with those obtained by an LC-MS/MS method (Fuenffinger et al., 2017). The LOD was 0.5 ng. Mitragynine was detected in 14 of 15 samples using LC-MS/MS and 13 of 15 samples using IMS as in one sample the compound was below the LOD.

Raman and portable devices

Surface-enhanced Raman spectroscopy (SERS) was used to detect mitragynine in M. speciosa samples Lanzarotta et el. (Lanzarotta et al., 2020). The advantage of the method is of the possibility to be applied by non-expert users. Over 100 samples and blanks were examined in duplicate using five identical handheld Raman spectrometers with the same method, which provided a false-positive rate of 2.1% and a false-negative rate of 0.7%. The LOD of mitragynine was 342 ng/mL (ppb). The method is ideal for preliminary screening test of mitragynine that can be then confirmed by other more time-consuming laboratory-based techniques.

In another record, DART with thermal desorption MS (DART-TD-MS), hand-held MS, portable ion mobility spectrometry (IMS), and portable Fourier-transform IR spectroscopy (FT-IR) were tested as field screening techniques for the detection of mitragynine in food and drug products and the results were compared to those obtained with laboratory techniques like LC-MS, HPLC-UV, and GC-MS (Voelker et al., 2021). The methods developed were applied to 96 kratom products, including capsules, bulk powder, and bulk plant material. The results suggested that the four portable devices provided a rapid detection of mitragynine in chloroform extracts and/or analysis of solid sample material in kratom matrices. The DART-TD-MS and IMS can be easily employed for the initial screening of materials because of very short analysis time and absence of sample preparation. Hand-held MS exhibited the highest false negative rate (6%). FT-IR, as well as the hand-held MS, requires extraction of the sample.

Immunological methods

Although chromatographic techniques have the advantages of good sensitivity, the separation step limits their routine use. Therefore, other screening and detection methods have been developed in recent years. For example, immunoassays are worldwide used for rapid screening or detection drugs in kratom preparations and biological fluids with the advantage of good sensitivity, simplicity and convenience (Schütz et al., 2006).

An issue that can be encountered with immunological assays is the potential cross-reactivity of the developed antibody against a specific kratom alkaloid with other alkaloids present in a sample (Limsuwanchote et al., 2017) (Lee et al., 2020).

An electrochemical immunosensor for the sensitive and rapid detection of mitragynine, using a modifier for the sensor based on multiwalled carbon nanotubes/chitosan nanocomposite was also developed (Mustafa et al., 2021). The detection of mitragynine resulted from an indirect competitive assay with 3,3′,5,5′-tetramethylbenzidine (TMB), which is the substrate in the enzymatic reaction of HRP-modified secondary antibody. The electrochemical immunosensor showed higher sensitivity

(10-fold) compared to conventional ELISA with a LOD of 0.018 µg/mL and a LOQ of 0.06 µg/mL.

MITRAGYNINE

Besides the methods developed for the analysis of mitragynine in kratom samples, the pure synthetic compound was obtained and characterized by NMR (Takayama et al., 1995, Ma et al., 2009, Sun and Ma, 2011, Kerschgens et al., 2012, Kruegel et al., 2016), HRMS (Sun and Ma, 2011), [α]D (Takayama et al., 1995, Kruegel et al., 2016) and elemental analysis (Ma et al., 2009).

7-HYDROXYMITRAGYNINE

Besides the methods developed for the analysis of 7-hydroxymitragynine in kratom samples, the pure synthetic compound was obtained and analysed by NMR (Kruegel et al., 2016, Takayama et al., 2002) and both EI-MS and HRMS (Takayama et al., 2002).

3. Ease of Convertibility Into Controlled Substances

KRATOM

It is not known from the literature that kratom can be converted into a controlled substance.

MITRAGYNINE

It is not known from the literature that mitragynine can be converted into a controlled substance. As reported above (Section 2. Chemistry, subsection D. Methods and Ease of Illicit Manufacturing), mitragynine can be converted into the bioactive 7-hydroxymitragynine in only one step (Kruegel et al., 2019, Kruegel et al., 2016, Takayama et al., 2002). However, 7-hydroxymitragynine is not listed as a controlled substance.

7-HYDROXYMITRAGYNINE

It is not known from the literature that 7-hydroxymitragynine can be converted into a controlled substance.

4. General Pharmacology

Kratom is the common term for Mitragyna speciosa, a tree native to Southeast Asia, including Myanmar, Thailand, Malaysia, Indonesia, New Guinea, and the Philippines. The indigenous population has used kratom leaves and derived products for centuries as an herbal medicine to treat pain, cough, diabetes, diarrhea, fever, and as a wound poultice, to enhance sociability and sexual desire, and to increase energy and decrease fatigue (especially among manual workers) (Singh et al., 2016). More recently, kratom has been used as an opioid substitute and to treat opioid withdrawal. Lower doses (1-5 g p.o. of plant material) reportedly have stimulant-like effects, while higher doses (concentrated products such as kratom extracts or >5 g p.o. of plant material) have opioid-like effects (Toce et al., 2018). Kratom use has spread to the United States and Western Europe over the past two decades, chiefly to self-medicate pain and opioid withdrawal and as a substitute for opioids (Singh et al., 2016).

Kratom contains more than 50 different alkaloids but only two indole alkaloids, mitragynine and its active metabolite 7-hydroxymitragynine (Kruegel et al., 2019), have been well characterized pharmacologically (Todd et al., 2020; Zhou et al., 2021). A third alkaloid, mitragynine pseudoindoxyl, is not found in the plant but is a metabolite of 7-hydroxymitragynine and active in vitro at the mu-opioid receptor (Kamble et al., 2020). Mitragynine comprises up to two-thirds of the total alkaloid content and is considered primarily responsible for the pharmacological actions of kratom. 7-Hydroxymitragynine comprises 1% or less of kratom alkaloids in the leaf, but is often present in higher concentration in processed kratom products sold commercially (Lydeker et al., 2016). Kratom grown experimentally in the US may have a lower mitragynine content than kratom grown in Thailand (Leon et al., 2009).

A. Routes of administration and dosage

Kratom is almost always taken orally in several forms. In Southeast Asia, typical formulations include chewing raw leaves, ingesting powdered leaves, or using leaves or leaf-extract to brew tea or create a decoction (boiling the leaves for several hours) (Singh et al., 2016; Singh et al., 2017). Kratom decoction is often mixed with another beverage (e.g., cola, cough syrup) to create a kratom "cocktail," in part to hide its bitter taste (Singh et al., 2016; Singh et al.,, 2017). In the United States and Western Europe, kratom is commonly taken as a powder dissolved in a beverage or in a capsule or tablet (Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020; Grundmann, 2017; Singh et al., 2016). Mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine have been found in resins and liquids sold online for use in electronic drug delivery devices (so-called "e-cigarettes") (Pearce et al., 2020).

In the absence of accurate labeling of kratom products, it is impossible to know the actual doses of kratom alkaloids ingested by kratom users. In Southeast Asia, surveys of convenience samples of kratom users suggest that a typical daily dose of liquid formulations (tea, decoction) is 3-6 glasses/day, containing an estimated 200-400 mg of mitragynine (Ahmad and Aziz, 2012; Saref et al., 2019). In the US, surveys of convenience samples of kratom users suggest that a typical daily dose of powder formulations is 2-6 g/day, although heavy users may ingest up to 20 g/day (Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020; Grundmann, 2017).

B. Pharmacokinetics

a. Animal studies

Oral mitragynine (20-50 mg/kg) in rats has a mean T_{max} of 1.3-4.5 hours, mean C_{max} of 400-700 ng/mL, and mean half-life of 3.3-9.4 hours (Avery et al., 2019; Ramachandram et al., 2020; Ya et al., 2019). Mean oral bioavailability was 17% and 3% (Avery et al., 2019; Parthasarathy et al. 2010). Oral dosing of rats with lyophilized kratom tea or organic extract of kratom tea (equivalent of 20 mg/kg mitragynine) generated T_{max} of 0.3 and 1.0 hours, respectively, C_{max} of 0.55 and 0.66 ng/mL, respectively, and oral bioavailability of 25.1% and 31.2%, respectively(compared to 17.0% with pure mitragynine) (Avery et al., 2019).

Oral mitragynine (5 mg/kg) in beagle dogs has a T_{max} of 0.3 (±0.1) hours, C_{max} of 278 (±47,4) ng/mL, half-life of 8.7 (±0.2) hours, and bioavailability of 69.6% (Maxwell et al., 2020).

A rat study found that intravenous mitragynine readily crosses the blood-brain barrier, with a T_{max} and half-life comparable to that in plasma (Kong et al., 2017b). We are not aware of any human studies regarding the blood-brain barrier.

b. Human studies

There are two published human studies of oral kratom pharmacokinetics, both in young adult men living in Southeast Asia who used kratom daily for at least 0.5 years at the time of the study. One study gave kratom tea (60 mL containing 6.25-11.5 mg mitragynine) daily for 7 days to 10 Thai men (mean [SD] body weight 77.3 [14.8] kg) (Trakulsrichai et al., 2015). Blood and urine samples were collected for 24 hours after a loading dose (equivalent of 6.25-23 mg mitragynine) given on the eighth day. Mitragynine mean (SD) T_{max} was 0.83 (0.35) hours and elimination half-life 23.24 (16.07) hours. The C_{max} varied linearly (R^2 = 0.677) with the loading dose: 18-30 ng/mL after 6.25 mg to 50-100 ng/mL after 20-23 mg. The second study gave 26 Malaysian men a single mitragynine dose of 1.6 mg/kg in the form of a kratom decoction containing 0.4-0.5 mg/mL mitragynine (Dr. Marek Chawarski, personal communication). Mitragynine mean (SD) T_{max} was 2.0 (0.8) hours (range 1-3 horus); C_{max} was 1884 (1056) ng/mL (range 829-5034 ng/mL) (Vicknasingam et al., 2020; Dr. Marek Chawarski, personal communication).

There are currently no human data on the oral bioavailability of mitragynine or 7-OH-mitragynine, either alone or as part of a kratom product. Given this lack of knowledge, and the known variability in oral bioavailability between rodents and beagle dogs (see above), it is impossible to accurately extrapolate to humans from the animal dosing of kratom and kratom alkaloids.

The overall effect of mitragynine on human liver cytochrome P450 activity remains unclear. Mitragynine inhibits three human liver cytochrome P450 enzymes (CYP2C9, CYP2D6, CYP3A) in human liver cells in vitro at 1µM concentration (Todd et al.2020). 7-Hydroxymitrigynine is a weaker inhibitor than mitragynine. A separate study found that mitragynine (1-25 µM) produced concentration-dependent increases in mRNA and protein expression and in vitro enzyme activity of CYP1A2, CYP2D6, and CYP3A4 in human liver cells in vitro (Lim et al., 2013). These in vitro findings suggest the possibility of clinically significant kratom-drug pharmacokinetic interactions with commonly used medications that are metabolized by these liver cytochromes, such as warfarin (CYP2C9), desipramine and dextromethorphan (CYP2D6), and benzodiazepines (CYP3A) (US Food and Drug Administration, 2020).

C. Pharmacodynamics

a. Animal studies

Mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine, and mitragynine pseudoindoxyl are partial agonists at the human mu-opioid receptor, activating the G-protein-coupled intracellular signaling –pathway while having little or no effect on the beta-arrestin pathway (Gutridge et al., 2020; Kruegel et al., 2016; Todd et al., 2020; Varadi et al., 2016; Zhou et al., 2021). This so-called mu-opioid receptor agonist bias has been proposed as conferring differential efficacy on mu-opioid receptor ligands. Ligands that preferentially activate the G-protein-coupled intracellular signaling pathway should have greater efficacy in producing analgesia and lesser efficacy in producing respiratory depression and physical dependence than ligands preferentially activating the beta-arrestin pathway (De Neve et al., 2021; Faouzi et al., 2020). A mouse study found that mitragynine pseudoindoxyl, at subcutaneous doses equipotent with morphine for analgesia, was significantly less potent than morphine in generating tolerance or withdrawal, slowing gastrointestinal transit, causing respiratory depression, or rewarding behavior (Varadi et al., 2016). However, human studies with an experimental mu-opioid receptor biased analgesic (not kratom-derived) find limited evidence for significantly reduced adverse effects compared to standard opioid analgesics (Tan & Habib, 2021).

7-Hydroxymitragynine has a 5-23-fold greater affinity than does mitragynine at the mu-opioid receptor (depending on the binding assay used) (Obeng et al., 2020; Obeng et al., 2021; Todd et al., 2020; Varadi et al., 2016). Morphine has 8-10-fold greater affinity than does 7-OH-mitragynine (Obeng et al., 2021; Todd et al., 2020; Varadi et al., 2016). Mu-opioid receptor activation is the mechanism considered responsible for the majority of pharmacodynamic effects of kratom and its alkaloids that are observed in rodents and humans. Mitragynine and 7-hydroxmitragynine are also competitive antagonists at the human kappa- and delta-opioid receptors (Kruegel et al., 2016), with less affinity than at the mu-opioid receptor (Obeng et al., 2021; Yue et al., 2018).

7-OH mitragynine has 5-20-fold greater efficacy than does mitragynine for activating the β-arrestin pathway (i.e., intrinsic activity) at the mu-opioid receptor (Obeng et al., 2021; Todd et al., 2020; Varadi et al., 2016). Morphine has 3-fold greater intrinsic activity at the mu-opioid receptor than does 7-)H-mitragynine ((Obeng et al., 2021; Todd et al., 2020), Mitragynine, but not 7-hydroxymitragynine, binds to alpha1- and alpha2-adrenergic receptors and serotonin-1A and -2A receptors (Ellis et al., 2020; Obeng et al., 2020). Mitragynine binds with low affinity to dopamine-D1 receptors on rat striatal membranes and not at all to dopamine-D2 receptors (Stolt et al., 2014). The functional significance of such binding remains unclear.

Kratom extracts, mitragynine, and 7-hydroxymitragynine have a variety of behavioral effects in rodents. Some effects are not observed consistently across studies, perhaps because of methodological differences in dose, type of kratom extract, route of administration, and timing of data collection (e.g., see motor activity below). Few studies evaluate a broad range of doses, so might miss effects at lower or higher doses or non-linear dose-response relationships. The most consistently observed effects are opioid-like (Prevete et al., 2021): analgesia (Chin et al., 2018), suppression of opioid withdrawal (Wilson et al., 2021), and inhibition of gastrointestinal transit (Avery et al., 2019).

Kratom extracts, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine, and mitragynine pseudoindoxyl significantly reduce acute mechanical or thermal pain in rats and mice by the intracerebroventricular, intraperitoneal, subcutaneous, or oral route of administration (Chin et al., 2018; Wilson et al., 2020). The analgesic effect is blocked by pretreatment with mu-opioid receptor antagonists (Chin et al., 2018) and does not occur in knock-out mice lacking the mu-opioid receptor (Bhowmik et al., 2021; Stott et al., 2014; Wilson et al., 2020), suggesting a mu-opioid receptor mechanism of action. Repeated dosing generates tolerance to the analgesic effect and there is cross-tolerance among mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine, and morphine (Chin et al., 2018). The relative analgesic potency of kratom alkaloids vs. conventional opioids remains uncertain because very few studies have compared the two using the same route of administration over a range of doses to establish equipotent doses. A rat study found that 100 mg/kg oral mitragynine had the same analgesic effect as 6 mg/kg oral oxycodone (Carpenter et al., 2016).

Kratom extracts, mitragynine, and 7-hydroxymitragynine suppress naloxone-precipitated opioid withdrawal in rodents by the intraperitoneal or oral route of administration (Cheaha et al., 2017; Harun et al., 2020; Wilson et al., 2020; Wilson et al., 2021).

Kratom extracts and mitragynine have inconsistent effects on motor activity in rodents. In several mouse studies, kratom extract decreased (mitragynine 0.5 mg/kg i.p. or p.o.) (Stolt et al., 2014), increased (mitragynine 7.4 mg/kg p.o.) (Wilson et al., 2020), or had no effect (50-200mg/kg p.o. methanolic extract or 5-20 mg/kg p.o. alkaloid extract) (Reanmongkol et al., 2007) on motor activity. In another study, mitragynine (30 mg/kg i.p.) had no effect (Matsumoto et al., 1997). In three rat studies, kratom alkaloid extract (60 mg/kg p.o.) had no effect (Cheaha et al., 2015), while mitragynine had no effect on (1-10 mg/kg i.p.) (Suhaimi et al., 2021) or increased (30 mg/kg i.p.) (Foss et al., 2020) motor activity. 7-Hydroxymitragynine (3 mg/kg i.p.) increased motor activity in male and female mice (Gutridge et al., 2020).

Kratom extracts and migragynine have a variety of non-opioid-like behavioral effects in rodents (Prevete et al., 2021). They reduce immobility in the forced swim test and tail suspension test, which are considered rodent models of anti-depressant action (Buckhalter et al., 2021; Idayu et al., 2011). Kratom extract significantly influences behavior in several mouse models of anti-psychotic action, including apomorphine-induced climbing behavior, haloperidol-induced catalepsy, and ketamine-induced social withdrawal (Vijeepanam et al., 2016). Kratom extracts in mice and rats reduce alcohol self-administration, alcohol reinforcement (conditioned place preference), alcohol-induced increase in dopamine concentration in the nucleus accumbens, and alcohol withdrawal (Gutridge et al., 2020; Kumarnsit et al., 2007; Vijeepallam et al., 2019). In rats, mitrogynine (10-30 mg/kg i.p.) attenuates the acquisition and expression of morphine conditioned place preference (Meepong et al., 2019) and reduces heroin self-administration but not methamphetamine self-administration (0.1-3.0 mg/kg i.p.) (Yue et al., 2018).

b. Human studies

In an observational study done in Britain in the early 1930's, five adult men given oral mitragynine acetate (50 mg once, or twice separated by two hours) or kratom (0.65 g or 1.3 g of powdered leaves) had reduced heat sensitivity and skin electrical resistance and dilatation of skin blood vessels (Grewal, 1932).

In a recent controlled clinical trial involving 26 Malaysian young adult men who were daily kratom users, a single oral dose of 1.6 mg/kg mitragynine (as a kratom decoction containing 0.4-0.5 mg/mL mitragynine [Dr. Marek Chawarski, personal communication]) doubled pain tolerance in the cold pressor test about one hour after ingestion (Vicknasingam et al., 2020). There was no change in pain threshold at two hours after ingestion.

5. Toxicology

a. Animal studies

In mice, the oral acute LD50 is 547.7 mg/kg or 477.1 mg/kg for mitragynine (Sabetghadam et al., 2013a; Smith et al., 2019), 173.2 mg/kg or 591.6 mg/kg for a kratom alkaloid extract (20-22% mitragynine) (Reanmongkol et al., 2007; Sabetghadam et al., 2013a) and 4.9 g/kg for kratom methanolic extract (Reanmongkol et al., 2007). Death is preceded by tremor, paralysis, apnea, and seizures, usually within one hour of administration (Reanmongkol et al., 2007; Sabetghadam et al., 2013a). 7-Hydroxymitragynine was not lethal at the highest dose administered (50 mg/kg), but respiratory depression and seizures were observed at the higher doses (Smith et al., 2019). The intravenous acute LD50 is 27.8 mg/kg for mitragynine and 24.7 mg/kg for 7-hydroxymitragynine (Smith et al., 2019). Death occurred by respiratory depression, usually within 10 minutes of administration. For comparison, the oral LD50 of morphing in mice is 600 mg/kg (Pfizer, 2017).

In rats, the oral LD50 was 4.9 g/kg for kratom methanolic extract and 173.2 mg/kg for kratom alkaloid extract (Reanmongkol et al., 2007). Mitragynine is acutely lethal at 100 mg/kg i.p., but not at 56 mg/kg i.p. (Obeng et al., 2021) and shows no toxicity at single oral doses up to 806 mg/kg (Macko et al., 1972). For comparison, the oral LD50 of morphine in rats is 461 mg/kg (Pfizer, 2017). Repeated oral dosing with 5 mg/kg/day or 50 mg/kg/day five days/week for 6 weeks or 1 mg/kg/day or 10 mg/kg/day for 4 weeks produces no toxicity (Macko et al., 1972; Sabetghadam et al., 2013b). Repeated oral dosing with 100 mg/kg/day for 4 weeks produces no death, tremor, or seizures, but decreases food intake and body weight and increases liver transaminase and blood urea nitrogen levels in female rats and reduces red and white blood cell counts in both female and male rats (Sabetghadam et al., 2013b). Histopathological examination of internal organs shows abnormalities in the liver and neuronal damage (but no axonal changes) in the medulla, hippocampus, frontal cortex, and cerebellum. There were no inflammatory changes or hemorrhage. A single oral dose of kratom methanolic extract (up to 1000 mg/kg) produces no acute toxicity (Harizal et al., 2010). Repeated oral dosing with a kratom methanolic extract (100 mg/kg, 500 mg/kg, or 1000 mg/kg daily for 14 days) produces a 10-20% increase in systolic and diastolic blood pressure and increased blood concentrations of urea nitrogen, creatinine, liver transaminases, cholesterol, and triglycerides, with no significant changes in food and water intake, body weight, weight of internal organs, or blood count (Harizal et al., 2010). The highest dose produced liver damage (sinusoidal congestion, fatty changes, necrosis), but no changes in kidney, lung, or brain.

In dogs, mitragynine at 80 mg/kg orally or 4.6 mg/kg i.v. produces no acute effects; 9.2 mg/kg i.v. produces slowed respiration and ataxia, 31.8 mg/kg i.v. produces respiratory depression and seizures (Macko et al., 1972). Repeated oral dosing with mitragynine (5 mg/kg/day or 20 mg/kg/day 6 days/week for 3 weeks) produces no toxicity (Macko et al., 1972). Increasing the dose to 40 mg/kg/day for weeks 4-7 produces decreased white blood cells, atypical lymphocytes, bone marrow hyperplasia, hyperplastic lymph nodes, and increased diffuse sinusoidal cellularity in the liver. In anesthetized dogs, mitragynine (cumulative dose of 18.5 mg/kg i.v.) has no significant effect on mean arterial blood pressure (Macko et al., 1972).

In cats, mitragynine (9.2-46.0 mg/kg i.p.) produces dose-dependent mydriasis and restlessness (Macko et al., 1972). In anesthestized cats, i.v. mitragynine was lethal at 4.6 or 9.2 mg/kg (Macko et al., 1972).

Both acute mitragynine (1, 5, or 10 mg/kg i.p.) and chronic mitragynine (1, 5, or 10 mg/kg i.p. daily for 28 days) impair the acquisition, consolidation, and retrieval of short-term memory in rats (Yusoff et al., 2014). These effects were comparable to those produced by morphine (5 mg/kg i.p.).

Kratom alkaloid extract reduces food and water intake acutely at 45 and 50 mg/kg i.p. but not 15 or 30 mg/kg i.p.; 40 mg/kg/day i.p. over 60 days also produced weight loss (Kumarnsit et al., 2006).

Kratom extract has no significant effect on sleep in mice (Reanmongkol et al., 2007) or rats (Cheaha et al., 2015).

Mitragynine (1, 5, or 10 mg/kg i.p.) acutely decreased EEG delta band power in the hippocampus and delta and theta activity in the frontal cortex of freely moving rats in one study (Yusoff et al., 2014) but had no effect in another study (Suhaimi et al., 2021). Chronic mitragynine (1, 5, 10 mg/kg/day i.p. for 60 days) significantly increased delta power in the cortex and decreased alpha power in the cortex and delta power in the hippocampus (Suhaimi et al., 2021). Kratom alkaloid extract (about 60% mitragynine) (80 mg/kg orally) has no effect on local field potentials in the mouse nucleus accumbens (Cheaha et al., 2017).

6. Adverse Reactions in Humans

No clinically significant adverse events or clinical laboratory or vital signs abnormalities were noted in 36 adult men who used kratom regularly in Southeast Asia and received either a single oral dose of a kratom decoction (mitragynine dose 1.6 mg/kg [Dr. Marek Chawarski, personal communication]) (Vicknasingam et al., 2020) or 8 daily doses of kratom tea (6.25-23 mg mitragynine) (Trakulsrichai et al., 2015) as part of a clinical trial. All participants in the kratom tea trial reported transient tongue numbness after drinking the kratom tea (Trakulsrichai et al., 2015).

In an observational study done in the early 1930's in Britain, five adult men given oral mitragynine acetate (50 mg once, or twice separated by two hours) or kratom (0.65 g or 1.3

g of powdered leaves) reported transient, mild side-effects at the higher doses, including giddiness, nystagmus, pupillary constriction, muscle tenseness, hand/tongue tremor, stomach irritation, nausea, sleepiness, and impaired motor coordination (Grewal, 1932).

At least 3,859 cases of non-lethal adverse reactions associated with kratom were reported to US poison control centers (National Poison Data System [NPDS]) between 2010 and 2019 (Anwar et al., 2016; Cumpston et al., 2018; Graves et al., 2021; Post et al., 2019). The number of annual cases increased from 26 in 2010 to 100 in 2013, 263 in 2015, 568 in 2017, and 1218 in 2019 (Anwar et al., 2016; Graves et al., 2021). Among the 3,484 cases reported from 2014-2019, the majority involved men (68.2%) and only kratom (63.0%) (Graves et al., 2021). Almost all cases were 18-59 years old (95.4%); 1.7% were 60-69 years old and 0.9% were 70 years or older. Among reports with information available, the route of administration was oral in 93.3%; kratom formulations were tablet or capsule 50.0%, powder or granules 19.1%, liquid 9.4%, and aerosol or topical 21.3%. Among the 2196 cases with kratom as the only substance mentioned, 0.8% were considered as involving major clinical effects (including death); 39.5% involved moderate effects, 26.6% involved minor effects, and 13.5% involved minimal or no effects. The major clinical toxicities were neuropsychiatric (agitation, confusion, sedation, hallucinations, tremor, seizure, coma) 75.4%, cardiovascular (tachycardia hypertension) 44.5%, gastrointestinal (abdominal pain, nausea, vomiting) 25.2%, and respiratory (respiratory depression) 12.1%. Among the 1174 cases involving only kratom that were reported to the NPDS from 2011-2017, the commonest individual clinical manifestations were agitation or irritability (22.9%), tachycardia (21.4%), nausea (14.6%), drowsiness or lethargy (14.3%), vomiting (13.2%), hypertension (10.1%), confusion (10.9%), and seizure (9.6%) (Post et al, 2019). Life-threatening conditions were rare: coma (3.6%), cardiac arrest (0.4%), respiratory arrest (0.5%), renal failure (0.5%).

A comparison of kratom-associated cases reported from 2010 to 2017 to the US NPDS (760 cases) and the Ramathibodi Poison Center in Thailand (168 cases) found that Thailand had a significantly higher proportion of cases with other substances present (64.8%) than did the US (37.4%) (odds ratio 3.10, 95% CI 2.15-4.47), with opioids and benzodiazepines being the commonest second substance in both countries (Davidson et al., 2021). Common clinical manifestations in both countries included agitation and irritability, tachycardia, and drowsiness or lethargy, but severe medical outcomes (ICU admission, death) were significantly more prevalent in the US (odds ratio 18.82, 95% CI = 5.85-60.56).

The French Addictovigilance system received 20 reports of kratom-associated cases from 2007-2020 (14 since 2016) (Le Boisselier et al., 2021). The major manifestations were dependence and withdrawal, anorexia, and psychosis. There was one death (2018) and one case of severe hepatitis (Le Boisselier et al., 2021).

Chronic kratom use has been associated with at least 92 cases of liver toxicity (Ballotin et al., 2021; Schimmel & Dart, 2020). Common presenting signs and symptoms include abdominal discomfort, jaundice, pruritus, and dark-colored urine. These typically start about 3 weeks after initiation of kratom use (range 1-8 weeks) and resolve within one month of stopping kratom use. Liver transplantation was reported in only one case, who also had Salmonella infection (Schimmel & Dart, 2020). The histologic picture can be hepatocellular, cholestatic, or mixed.

Small cross-sectional studies of kratom users in Southeast Asia find no significant association between long-term, frequent kratom use and clinically significant abnormalities in standard clinical laboratory blood tests, such as complete blood count, blood chemistries, and lipid profiles (Abdullah et al., 2020; La-up, Saengow, & Aramrattana, 2021; Singh et al., 2018a) or blood concentrations of gonadal hormones (Singh et al., 2018b). A 42-year old US man developed hypogonadotropic hypogonadism with elevated prolactin and decreased testosterone blood concentrations, fatigue, and decreased libido while taking kratom (LaBryer et al., 2018). No other causes were identified during medical evaluation, and he returned to normal within two months of stopping kratom use.

There are several published case reports of cardiac arrhythmia or cardiac arrest associated with kratom use in Southeast Asia but all cases likely involved other substance use and none measured mitragynine concentrations (Abdullah and Singh, 2021a). A cross-sectional study of 100 regular kratom users (estimated average mitragynine intake 7.06 mg/kg/day) in Malaysia found no significant differences in electrocardiographic abnormalities compared with 100 non-kratom-using control subjects (Abdullah et al., 2021). The kratom users were significantly more likely to have sinus tachycardia (odds ratio 8.61, 95% CI 1.06-70.17). A study of a convenience sample of 9 adult (18-43 years old) Malaysian men who were chronic (2-14 years), daily kratom users (2-6 glasses/day of "brewed kratom juice") administered an ECG, transthoracic echocardiogram, and peripheral blood collection for mitragynine assay within 2-3 hours of their last kratom ingestion (Abdullah and Singh, 2021b). Four respondents had a prolonged QTc interval, associated with a significantly higher serum mitragynine concentration (mean [standard deviation] 15.9 [6.4] mg/L) than the 5 respondents with normal QTc interval {5.9 [2.7] mg/L). There were no other ECG abnormalities. All echocardiograms were normal, except for one respondent with left ventricular hypertrophy and one with "trivial" tricuspid regurgitation. All respondents were daily cigarette smokers (≤ 20/day); none used alcohol or other drugs. No respondent had a personal or family history of cardiovascular disease.

A cross-sectional survey of a convenience sample of 150 Malaysian men (92% employed, 91% with at least secondary education) who used kratom (59% at least 6 years, 55% more than three times a day) found 4% reported current positive psychotic symptoms (Abdullah et al., 2019). None of the men reported a history of psychiatric disorder; none had used illicit psychoactive substances within the past year (two-thirds had never used).

7. Dependence Potential

A. Animal Studies

Repeated oral dosing of rats with mitragynine (15 mg/kg i.p. twice daily for 14 days) (Harun et al., 2020) or of mice with mitragynine (15 mg/kg i.p. daily for 5 days) (Wilson et al., 2021), with kratom alkaloid extract (escalating doses of 30-125 mg/kg [equivalent to mitragynine 14.7-60.7 mg/kg] twice daily for 4 days) (Wilson et al., 2021), or with lyophilized kratom tea (escalating doses of 30-125 mg/kg [equivalent to mitragynine 0.21-0.93 mg/kg] twice daily for 4 days) (Wilson et al., 2020) produced physical dependence, as evidenced by naloxone-precipitated withdrawal signs. These withdrawal signs were substantially less intense than those precipitated by comparable dosing with morphine. Repeated oral dosing of rats with mitragynine (15 mg/kg i.p. twice daily for 14 days) did not induce spontaneous withdrawal after dosing was stopped (Harun et al., 2020).

B. Human Studies

One clinical trial used the Clinical Opioid Withdrawal Scale (COWS, a standardized, validated rating instrument) to evaluate opioid withdrawal signs and symptoms in 26 Malaysian young men who used oral kratom several times daily for at least 3 years (Vickasingam et al., 2020). COWS scores after overnight abstinence from kratom use or within 24 hours of taking a dose of kratom concoction (containing 1.6 mg/kg mitragynine) were all 0.5 or lower, indicating no opioid-like withdrawal after a period of 10-20 hours of abstinence. This assessment period may have been too brief to allow kratom withdrawal to develop, given that self-reported withdrawal may take up to 48 hours to develop (Grundmann, 2017) and the human elimination half-life of mitragynine is 23 hours (albeit based on one study) (Trakulsrichai et al., 2015).

In-person interviews with convenience samples of long-term daily oral kratom users in Southeast Asia find up to three-quarters reporting withdrawal symptoms after cessation of use (Saingam et al., 2016; Singh et al., 2014; Singh et al., 2018c; Singh et al., 2018d; Suwanlert, 1975). Typical withdrawal symptoms include irritability, anxiety, depression, sleep disturbance, lacrimation, rhinorrhea, muscle and bone pain, muscle spasm, diarrhea, and decreased appetite. The likelihood and severity of withdrawal are positively associated with duration, frequency, and intensity of kratom use.

Cases of kratom withdrawal come to medical attention in the United States literature, but the overall prevalence of kratom withdrawal is unknown (Stanciu et al., 2019). In an online cross-sectional survey of a convenience sample of 8049 US kratom users, 43% reported experiencing uncomfortable symptoms within 48 hours of stopping kratom use (Grundmann, 2017). Kratom withdrawal symptoms reported in the US are similar to those reported in Southeast Asian patients (Stanciu et al., 2019). Withdrawal appears more common among long-term, heavy, daily users. Five cases of opioid-like neonatal abstinence syndrome (e.g., jitteriness, irritability, emesis, feeding intolerance) have been reported in neonates born to mothers who were heavy regular kratom users (up to 16-18 g thrice daily) but not using opioids (Wright et al., 2021). All neonates responded to standard treatment for neonatal opioid abstinence syndrome, i.e., tapering doses of opioids. In some cases, the mother also experienced opioid-like withdrawal in the hospital.

In a 2017 cross-sectional, anonymous online survey of a convenience sample of 2,798 self-selected US adult kratom users, 9.5% reported experiencing kratom withdrawal symptoms (Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020). Their mean (SD) score on the Subjective Opiate Withdrawal Scale (a standardized, validated rating instrument) was 8.8 (8.4), indicating mild withdrawal symptoms.

8. Abuse Potential

A. Animal Studies

Kratom extract or mitragynine show rewarding properties in only one of three widely used rat models of abuse potential. Mitragynine (10-90 mg/kg i.p) generates a conditioned place preference (Japarin et al., 2021; Meepong et al., 2019; Sufka et al., 2012; Yusoff et al., 2014; Yusoff et al., 2017; Yusoff et al., 2018), considered a sign of rewarding action. This effect is blocked by the mu-opioid receptor antagonist naloxone, suggesting that it is mediated by activation of the mu-opioid receptor (Yusoff et al., 2017). However, a methanolic extract of kratom leaves (50-300 mg/kg i.p.) does not generate conditioned place preference (Sufka et al., 2012), nor does lyophilized kratom tea (100 mg [equivalent to 0.74 mg mitragynine]/kg, 1 g [7.4 mg mitragynine]/kg orally) in mice (Wilson et al., 2020). In contrast, mitragynine is not self-administered by rats (25-150 µg or 0.1-3.0 mg iv) (Hemby et al., 2108; Yue et al., 2018) and does not alter the reward threshold (lowering threshold is rewarding) or response latency for intracranial self-stimulation (ICSS) at 1-30 mg/kg ip or intragastric (Behnood-Rod et al., 2020) (Dr. Patrick Beardsley, personal communication). Mitragynine increased the reward threshold at the highest dose studied (56 mg/kg ip), suggesting an aversive action (Behnood-Rod et al., 2020).

7-Hydroxymitragynine (5, 10 i.v.) is self-administered by rats (Hemby et al., 2018). This effect is blocked by the selective mu-opioid receptor antagonist naloxonazine and the selective delta-opioid antagonist naltrindole, suggesting dual mu- and delta-opioid receptor mechanisms. 7-Hydroxymitragynine had inconsistent effects on ICSS reward threshold in two studies. In one study, lower doses (0.1-1.0 mg/kg i.p. had no effect, while a higher dose (3.2 mg/kg i.p.) increased ICSS reward threshold (with no change in response latency), suggesting an aversive action of high-dose 7-hydroxymitragynine (Behnood-Rod et al., 2020).. In another (unpublished) study, 7-OH-mitragynine (0.3-3 mg/kg ip) lowered the ICSS threshold (Dr. Patrick Beardsley, personal communication). We are not aware of any studies of 7-hydroxymitragynine and conditioned place preference.

Rats can be trained to distinguish mitragynine (15 mg/kg i.p.) or 7-hydroxymitragynine injections from saline injections, suggesting that these two alkaloids produce distinctive substance-induced internal sensations (Harun et al., 2015; Obeng et al., 2021). Rats do not readily distinguish these two alkaloids from morphine, suggesting that the internal sensations are morphine-like. Rats also do not distinguish mitragynine (10 mg/kg ip) from methamphetamine (1 mg/kg i.p.) (Meepong et al., 2019). 7-Hydroxymitragynine is perceived as more morphine-like than is mitragynine (Obeng et al., 2021).

Kratom methanolic extract (100 mg/kg p.o., 4.4% mitragynine by weight) did not acutely increase dopamine concentration in mouse brain nucleus accumbens, while a reinforcing dose of alcohol did (Vijeepallam et al., 2019). Increasing nucleus accumbens dopamine concentration is an acute effect of almost all substances of abuse, including opioids (Gardner, 2011).

B. Human Studies

A 2018-2019 anonymous online survey of a self-selected convenience sample of 59,714 US adults weighted to be demographically representative of the entire US population identified 490 respondents with at least one use of kratom in the prior 12 months (Schimmel et al. 2020). About 20% of these kratom users were considered at severe or substantial risk of having a kratom use disorder, based on their responses to a standardized screening instrument (Drug Abuse Screening Test).

In a 2017 cross-sectional, anonymous online survey of a convenience sample of 2,798 self-selected US adult kratom users, respondents rated their typical subjective drug experience on a 100-mm visual-analogue scale (Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020). The mean (SD) rating for "drug liking" was 85.7 (23.7) and for "good effects" 86.4 (23.0), but only 12.0 (20.1) for "high" and 25.1 (27.1) for "euphoric."

Cross-sectional surveys of convenience samples of regular kratom users in Southeast Asia find many respondents report difficulty reducing or stopping their kratom use (Ahmad and Aziz, 2012; Saingam et al., 2013). However, these surveys rarely find psychosocial impairment associated with kratom use (Singh et al., 2015; Singh et al., 2017).

A review of 161 unstructured kratom experience reports spontaneously posted on a web site for psychoactive substance users between 2001 and 2012 found that 30.4% experienced euphoria and 23.6% experienced relaxation (Swogger et al., 2015). The vast majority of respondents (self-selected convenience samples) in Southeast Asia and the United States in cross-sectional surveys of motivation for kratom use report using to self-medicate a physical or psychological condition, cope with a problem, or enhance energy (Bath et al., 2020; Grundmann, 2017; Saref et al., 2019; Singh et al., 2019). Very few respondents report use for "recreational" purposes; most survey questionnaires do not provide a response option for recreational use. Some respondents in Southeast Asia report using kratom to enhance sociability (Saingam et al., 2013).

9. Therapeutic Applications and Extent of Therapeutic Use and Epidemiology of Medical Use

Kratom and its alkaloids have never been licensed for therapeutic use. Several therapeutic applications have been proposed for kratom and its alkaloids based on preclinical data (see section 4.C.a above) and anecdotal reports from kratom users (Bath et al., 2020; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020; Grundmann, 2017; Saref et al., 2019; Singh et al., 2019). These include analgesia, treatment of opioid and alcohol use disorders and opioid and alcohol withdrawal, and treatment of depression and anxiety.

10. Listing on the WHO Model List of Essential Medicines

Kratom, mitragynine, and 7-hydroxymitragynine are not included in the WHO Model List of Essential Medicines.

11. Marketing Authorizations (as a Medicinal Product)

None.

12. Industrial Use

None.

13. Non-Medical Use, Abuse and Dependence

The actual prevalence of kratom use and misuse are unknown, as kratom was not included until very recently in large, population-based epidemiological surveys. A 2019 cross-sectional survey of a nationally representative probability sample of 56,136 community-dwelling United States residents at least 12 years old (US National Survey on Drug Use and Health) estimated past-year kratom (powder, pill, leaf) use by 0.7% (95% CI 0.6-0.8%) of the US population (Palamar, 2021). Kratom use was significantly more prevalent among 18-49 year-olds, women, and non-Hispanic Whites. Past-year cannabis use (adjusted odds ratio 4.57, 95% CI 3.29-6.35), cocaine use (adjusted odds ratio 1.69, 95% CI 1.06-2.69), and non-medical use of prescription stimulants (adjusted odds ratio 2.10, 95% CI 1.44-3.05) were all significantly associated with kratom use, while opioid use was not. However, prescription opioid use disorder was significantly associated with kratom use (adjusted odds ratio 3.20, 95% CI 1.38-7.41).

A 2018-2019 anonymous online survey of a self-selected convenience sample of 59,714 US adults weighted to be demographically representative of the entire US population found an estimated prevalence of 0.8% (95% CI 0.7-0.9) for past-year kratom use (an estimated 2.0 million adults) and 1.3% (95% CI 1.2-1.4) for lifetime kratom use (an estimated 3.35 million adults) (Schimmel et al., 2020). Kratom users were more likely than non-users to be younger than 45 years and men.

A 2017 cross-sectional, anonymous online survey of a convenience sample of 2,798 self-selected US adult kratom users found that 9.9% met DSM-5 criteria for past-year mild kratom substance use disorder, 1.8% for moderate kratom substance use disorder, and 0.6% for severe kratom substance use disorder (Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020).

A 2016 cross-sectional survey of a stratified random sample of 30,411 Thailand residents (15-64 years old) weighted to be representative of the national population found that 14.3 % (95% CI 13.7-14.9) reported lifetime use of kratom leaves and 14.2% (95% CI 13.6-14.8) use of kratom cocktail (kratom leaf decoction mixed with another beverage); 2.1% (95% CI 1.9-2.3) past-year use of kratom leaves and 0.7% (95% CI 0.6-0.8) of kratom cocktail; and 1.4% (95% CI 1.3-1.5) past-month use of kratom leaves and 0.4% (95% CI 0.3-0.5) of kratom cocktail (Wonguppa and Kanato, 2018).

There are little data available on the prevalence of treatment for kratom use disorder, in part because kratom was not included on most standard questionnaires until recently. In 2018, Malaysia reported 16 admissions for the treatment of kratom use disorder, out of 26,449 total admissions for substance use disorders (excluding alcohol and tobacco) (United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, 2020).

In an anonymous online survey of more than 110,000 self-selected psychoactive substance users from more than 25 countries conducted November-December, 2019, 3.5% of respondents reported using kratom in the prior 12 months (Global Drug Survey, 2020). Kratom ranked 21st in prevalence among all psychoactive substances mentioned.

14. Nature and Magnitude of Public Health Problems Related to Misuse, Abuse and Dependence

More than 300 deaths associated with kratom have been reported in the peer-reviewed medical literature through 2019 (Corkery et al., 2019; Eggleston et al., 2019; Mata and Anders, 2020; Olsen et al., 2019). The vast majority of cases were in the US and Western Europe and occurred since 2015. 127 kratom-associated deaths were reported to the UNODC Early Warning Advisory Tox-Portal between January 2017 and December 2020: 63.8% from the US (the majority from California), 30.7% from Thailand, 3.1% from Sweden, 1.6% from Australia, and 0.8% from Finland (UNODC Early Warning Advisory Tox-Portal, 2021). More than four-fifths of cases (84%) were in men; almost one-third (30.7%) were 16-24 years old, almost one-half (48%) were 25-44 years old, one-fifth (19.3%) were 45-64 years old, and 2% were older than 64 years old. The causal role of kratom was not provided in 40% of cases. Among the remaining cases, a causal relationship with kratom was considered a "high" likelihood in 20%, a "medium" likelihood in 62.3%, and present but not contributory in 17.6%. In the high likelihood cases, mitragynine concentrations ranged from 118-3390 ng/mL in peripheral blood, 320 ng/mL in femoral blood, 39-543 ng/mL in heart blood, and 480 ng/mL in blood from a body cavity. A study of 35 deaths in Northern Nevada, US between 2015-2020 in which mitragynine was detected in blood post-mortem found no significant difference in mitragynine blood concentration between the 27 cases in which kratom was considered as contributing to death (mean [standard deviation] 269.4 {392.5] ng/mL, range 8.7-1800 ng/mL) and the 8 cases with other causes of death (315 [297.2] ng/mL, range 110-980 ng/mL (Schmitt et al., 2021) For comparison, in two small studies of controlled administration of kratom extracts to adult Southeast Asian men who were experienced kratom users, oral mitragynine administration of 20-23 mg (as kratom tea) or 1.6 mg/kg (as kratom decoction) produced maximum peripheral blood concentrations of 50-100 ng/mL (Trakulsrichai et al., 2015) or 829-5034 ng/mL (Vicknasingam et al., 2020; Dr. Marek Chawarski, personal communication), respectively This lack of association between mitragynine blood concentration and risk of lethality suggests that kratom consumption was not a causal factor in the vast majority of kratom-associated deaths, but rather was an incidental finding.

A 2019 review of 156 kratom-associated deaths identified by published literature and internet searches and UK mortality registries found that the majority were White (100%), young adult (mean age 32.3 years) men (80%) with a history of substance abuse (95%) (Corkery et al., 2019). The 152 kratom-associated overdose deaths reported to the US State Unintentional Drug Overdose Reporting System (SUDORS) in 27 states from July 2016 through December 2017 chiefly involved primarily White (91.5%) men (76.3%) with a history of substance misuse (80.9%) (Olsen et al., 2019)

In a series of 11 unintended drug overdose fatalities in Sweden associated with krypton (combination of kratom and the opioid analgesic O-desmethyltramadol), the mitragynine blood concentrations were 20-180 ng/mg, suggesting possible additive mu-opioid receptor action (Kronstrand et al., 2011).

Attributing causality to kratom in a kratom-associated death can be difficult for several reasons (Papsun et al., 2019). First identification of the two major active compounds, mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragnine can be problematic due to their instability over long periods at room or body temperature and the need for highly specific assays to distinguish them from their stereoisomers. Second, many cases do not receive comprehensive toxicological evaluation and some novel psychoactive substances (NPS) will remain undetected because accurate assays are not yet available. Third, most cases involve multiple substances, rather than only a kratom alkaloid. A review of 156 published and otherwise identified cases found that one or more other drugs were present in 95.6% of the cases for which toxicology was available (Corkery et al., 2019). The commonest other drugs were opioids, stimulants, and sedatives. Mitragynine/7-hydroxymitragynine was considered as contributing to the cause of death in 23% of cases, including the 6 cases in which no other substances were identified. The mean (range) mitragynine blood concentration was 398 (3.5-890) ng/mL in cases with no other substances present and 890 (0.9-16,000) ng/mL with other substances present. Among the 152 cases reported to the US SUDORS, other drugs were present in 92% of cases, including fentanyl/fentanyl analogues (65.1%), heroin (32.9%), benzodiazepines (22.4%), prescription opioids (19.7%), cocaine (18.4%), alcohol (12.5%), and methamphetamine (8.6%) (Olsen et al., 2019).

In a series of 15 kratom-associated deaths in Colorado, USA from 1999-2017, none were considered clearly due to kratom, after a comprehensive forensic analysis including toxicology (Gershman et al., 2019). In a series of 20 kratom-associated deaths evaluated in Orange County, California US in 2017 and 2018, three cases were considered due to mitragynine (no other drugs found), in 13 cases mitragynine was considered contributory (other drugs found), and in four cases mitragynine played no role (Mata and Anders, 2019), Mitragynine blood concentrations were 1590–3420 ng/mL in the first group and 24.6–1210 ng/ml in the second group. In a series of 35 kratom-associated deaths evaluated in Northern Nevada US in 2015-2020, 8 cases were considered definitely not caused by substance toxicity (e.g., death attributed to gunshot wound, cardiac disease) (Schmitt et al., 2021). The 27 cases considered due to substance toxicity all had substances other than mitragynine identified (opioids 81.5%, benzodiazepines 33.3%, ethanol 33.3%, amphetamines 25.9%, nitrous oxide 7.4%, aripiprazole 3.7%). In the case where aripiprazole was the only other substance identified, phenibut was found at the scene but not tested for. In a convenience sample of 583 post-mortem blood samples sent by US medical examiners to a national forensic reference laboratory between October 2016 and December 2018, the mean (standard deviation) mitragynine concentration was 372 (574) ng/mL, median 140 ng/mL, and range 5.9-4,400 ng/mL (Papsun et al., 2019), For comparison, mitragynine peak blood concentrations were 18.5-105 ng/mL in 10 Thai kratom users taking 6-10 mg mitragynine daily (Trakulsrichai et al., 2015).

Kratom was associated with 90 driving under the influence of drugs (DUID) reports between January 2017 and December 2020—all from the US (UNODC Early Warning Adivsory Tox-Portal, 2021). About four-fifths (82%) involved men. However, a direct causal link with kratom could not be established in the majority of cases. In the US state of North Carolina, mitragynine was identified in only six DUID cases between 2014 and 2017 (Papsun et al., 2019). In 2018, mitragynine was identified in 20 cases (out of about 17,500 submissions)—mean (SD) blood concentration 106 (117) ng/mL, median 75 ng/mL, range 11-490 ng/mL. Urine drug testing of 1635 consecutive motor vehicle drivers approached at 13 sites in Thailand between December 2005 and May 2006 identified 0.9% as kratom users (i.e., mitragynine detected in their urine) (Ingsathit et al., 2009). The most frequently detected substances were alcohol (5.5%), antihistamines (2.0%), amphetamine (1.8%), and cannabis (1.1%).

The number of blood samples received for mitragynine testing by a prominent US national forensic reference laboratory (chiefly post-mortem and DUID cases) increased from less than ten per month from October 2012 through January 2016 to 11-40 per month through July 2017 to 41-80 per month through December 2018 (Papsun et al., 2019). The number of samples testing positive for mitragynine increased from two in 2012 to 785 in 2018.

15. Licit Production, Consumption and International Trade

Cultivation of Mitragyna speciosa is legal in Southeast Asia. According to an unverified report, Indonesia has a large export trade of kratom leaves to Western countries (Wikipedia, 2021).

16. Illicit Manufacture and Traffic and Related Information

More than 99% of global seizures of kratom over the past decade have been in Southeast Asia (United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, 2021). Seizures have increased over the past 5 years from about 57 tons in 2015, 400 tons in 2016, 285 tons in 2017, 170 tons in 2018, and 398 tons in 2019.

17. Current International Controls and Their Impact

Kratom, mitragynine, and 7-hydroxymitragynine are not currently under international control under UN treaties. The Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN) banned kratom from inclusion in traditional medicine or health supplements in 2013 on the grounds of being “harmful to human health” (Association of South East Asian Nations, 2013). Thailand made kratom a legal herb on 23 August 2021 (Laohong, K-o, 2021).

18. Current and Past National Controls

Kratom, mitragynine, and 7-hydroxymitragynine were under no national controls until about 15 years ago. Since then, they are banned or regulated as controlled psychoactive substances or herbal supplements in several dozen countries globally. At the national (federal) level in the United States, kratom cannot be marketed as a dietary supplement and is considered a drug of concern by the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA). Kratom is banned in 6 US states and several cities. Canada bans the marketing of kratom for human consumption (United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime, 2021).

19. Other Medical and Scientific Matters Relevant for a Recommendation on the Scheduling of the Substance

None

APPROVED MEDICAL, SCIENTIFIC OR INDUSTRIAL USE

No countries reported approved human medical products and veterinary products containing Kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine.

Medical use

One country (South East Asia) described kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine as being used as a part of traditional medicine.

Scientific use

Three countries (2 Region of the Americas, 1 Western Pacific) reported kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine was being currently used in medical or scientific research (excluding use as an analytical standard) in their country (such as in clinical trials for any human or veterinary indication). One country (Region of the Americas) stated that there was government sponsored research on the “basic pharmacology and potential therapeutic value of mitragynine for disorders, including opioid withdrawal syndrome”. Another country (Region of the Americas) described a “phase I trial to evaluate the safety of different Kratom related formulations in healthy adult participants”. One country (Western Pacific Region) stated there was “scientific research” being conducted, with no further details provided.

Industrial use

One country (Region of the Americas) described kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine was being used for industrial or other non-medical/non-scientific purposes in their country – more specifically, for industrial purposes related to rubber.

EPIDEMIOLOGY OF NON-MEDICAL USE

Eighteen countries (12 European, 3 Region of the Americas, 1 South East Asia, 2 Western Pacific) reported there is evidence of the use of kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine for non-medical use in their country (use outside of the medical, industrial or scientific context).

Routes of administration and formulations

The most common route of administration for kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine reported was oral and smoking (Table 2).

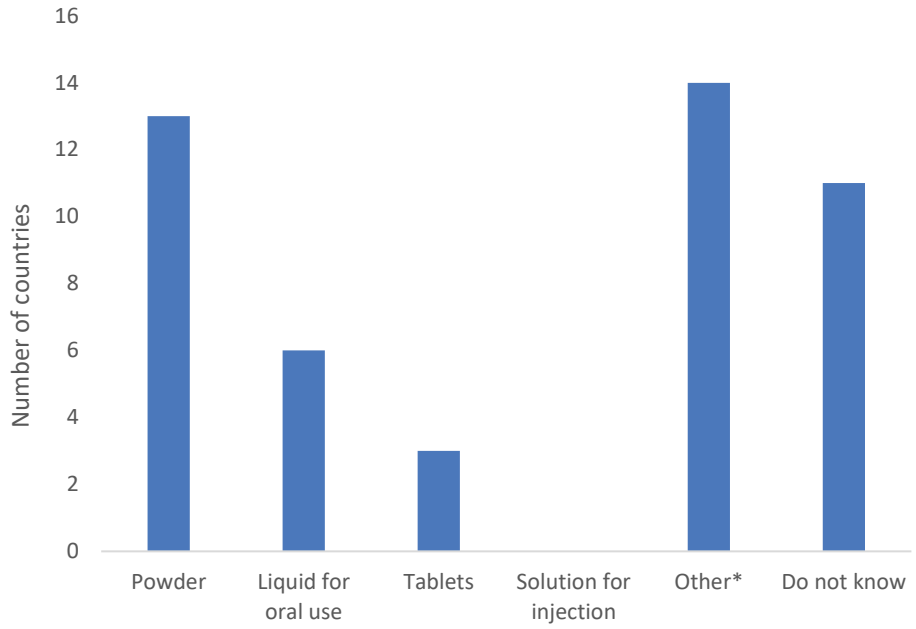

Table 2. Reported routes of Kratom administration

Route of administration	Number of countries

Sniffing	1

Other*	3
Do not know	13

*Other routes of administration included tea/hot-water extraction (n=3 countries) and chewing (n=1; same country that specified tea).

The most commonly reported formulations of kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine were powder, herbal mixture and liquid for oral administration (Figure 1). One country (European Region) provided the specific description that "the seizures have been herbal material as raw or fine powder e.g. for infusion and capsules containing the powdered herbal material for oral use".

*14 countries noted other formulations, mainly describing herbal mixtures (n=13), and capsule packaging (n=5).

Perceived negative health impact

Thirteen countries (6 European, 3 Region of the Americas, 1 South East Asia, 3 Western Pacific) reported the level of negative health impact due to kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragyninenon-medical consumption as “especially serious” or “substantial” (Figure 2).

A country (Region of the Americas) noted "Mitragynine has been encountered on the illicit drug market and has been positively identified in 583 postmortem cases". Another country from the same region noted "There has been at least one death believed to be caused by Kratom intoxication". A second country in the Region on the Americas reported from their adverse reaction database three reports involving kratom reported from a hospital which included events (one of each) including acute hepatic failure, acute kidney injury, cholecystitis, cholelithiasis, dizziness, gastrooesophageal reflux disease, increased hepatic enzymes, hepatitis, malaise, mental disorder, mental impairment, nausea, rhabdomyolysis and positive salmonella test.

One country (European region) responded there had been kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine "Seizures and findings in femoral blood in cases of deaths, poison information centre calls".

A country (Western Pacific) which noted "substantial" negative health impact of kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine in their country further remarked that "traditionally it may have been consumed for some health benefits. Based on a study on kratom users conducted by [a university in our country] kratom consumption was found to not cause impairment in quality of life of kratom users except for severe kratom dependence which may cause deterioration in physical well-being of users. Nevertheless, we have also seen reports by [our Police force] regarding seizures of concoctions of kratom mixed with other substances (i.e. Coke, cough syrup) for consumption, indicating some form of substance abuse. In addition to the fact that consumption of kratom can cause dependence, this is a significant cause for concern to public health."

Emergency Department visits

Six countries (3 European, 2 Region of the Americas, 1 South East Asian) were aware of emergency room/department (ED) visits related to kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine. Five of these countries (2 European, 2 Region of the Americas, 1 South East Asian) were able to provide further remarks on these ED/hospital visits.

One country (South East Asia) described ED patients as presenting with "running nose, watery eyes, insomnia". One country (Region of the Americas) reported data from a national poison control data system where "there have been incidence of agitation, tachycardia, drowsiness, seizure, respiratory depression, and coma".

One country (European) noted "Since 2007, at least 30 patients have presented symptoms after consumation of kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine alone or in association with other substances. Use disorder, dependency, withdrawal syndrome, anorexia/weight loss, psychiatric decompensation, toxic hepatitis. Nausea, abdominal pains, respiratory depression". Another country (European) noted that Kratom was consumed with other substances in all the ED presentations which presented with "Reduced consciousness, tachycardia, hypertension, agitation, hallucination, paranoid ideation, hyponatraemia, ALT/AST increased, CK increased, hypothermia, abnormal sweating, vomiting, seizure, mydriasis, epilepsy, bradycardia, depression".

Deaths

Two countries (1 European, 1 Region of the Americas) reported one death each where kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine was the only substance involved, one death occurring in 2018 and one in 2020.

Six countries (4 European, 2 Region of the Americas) reported a total of 590 fatalities where kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine and other substances were involved in the death (years 2013-2020). Of note is that one country (Region of the Americas) reported the bulk of these deaths - 583 deaths where Kratom and other substances were involved over the years 2013-2018.

One country (European) reported a kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine related death in 2020 where it was unknown whether other substances were involved.

Drug Dependence

Four countries (2 European, 1 South East Asian, 1 Region of the Americas) reported they were aware of people presenting to drug dependence treatment in their country due to use of kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine.

CURRENT DRUG CONTROL

Eighteen countries (14 European, 4 Western Pacific) responded kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine is currently controlled under national legislation to regulate its availability.

Another country (Region of the Americas) reported that "Kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine – mitragynine (or 7-hydroxymitragynine) is a substance that can be extracted from Kratom plant. One country reported that since it is an isomer of Folcodine (listed nominally under [the List of Narcotic Drugs that can have medical use]), mitragynine is also under the control of [the List of Narcotic Drugs that can have medical use].

Table 3 shows the main reported activities involving kratom, mitragynine, 7-hydroxymitragynine.

Drugs are regulated in the United States (US) by the Controlled Substances Act (CSA) if assessment of their abuse potential, including public health risks, show such control is warranted. An evaluation via the 8 factors of the CSA provides the comprehensive assessment required for permanent listing of new chemical entities and previously uncontrolled substances. Such an assessment was published for two kratom alkaloids in 2018 that the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) have identified as candidates for CSA listing: mitragynine (MG) and 7-hydroxymitragynine (7-OH-MG) (Henningfield et al., 2018a). That assessment concluded the abuse potential of MG was within the range of many other uncontrolled substances, that there was not evidence of an imminent risk to public health, and that a Schedule I listing (the only option for substances that are not FDA approved for therapeutic use such as kratom) carried public health risks including drug overdoses by people using kratom to abstain from opioids. The purpose of this review is to provide an updated abuse potential assessment reviewing greater than 100 studies published since January 1, 2018. These include studies of abuse potential and physical dependence/withdrawal in animals; in-vitro receptor binding; assessments of potential efficacy treating pain and substance use disorders; pharmacokinetic/pharmacodynamic studies with safety-related findings; clinical studies of long-term users with various physiological endpoints; and surveys of patterns and reasons for use and associated effects including dependence and withdrawal. Findings from these studies suggest that public health is better served by assuring continued access to kratom products by consumers and researchers. Currently, Kratom alkaloids and derivatives are in development as safer and/or more effective medicines for treating pain, substances use disorders, and mood disorders. Placing kratom in the CSA via scheduling would criminalize consumers and possession, seriously impede research, and can be predicted to have serious adverse public health consequences, including potentially thousands of drug overdose deaths. Therefore, CSA listing is not recommended. Regulation to minimize risks of contaminated, adulterated, and inappropriately marketed products is recommended.

1 INTRODUCTION

This is an update to the Henningfield et al. (2018) assessment of the abuse potential of kratom based on the eight factors of the United States Controlled Substances Act (US CSA) (Henningfield et al., 2018a) and summarizes new scientific findings from January 2018 through August 2021. The CSA eight factors evaluate pharmacological actions in the brain or central nervous system (CNS) that may lead to dependence, substance use disorders, or addictions (American Psychiatric Association, 2013; National Institute on Drug Abuse, 2019; World Health Organization, 1994; O'Brien et al., 2011). Abuse potential assessments determine whether substances and medicinal products should be controlled by the CSA (scheduled), and if so the restrictiveness or level of control. Substances are only placed in Schedule I (heroin, LSD, cannabis) when there is no FDA approved therapeutic use and sufficient abuse potential to merit control. Substances with approved therapeutic uses and sufficient abuse potential must be placed in Schedules II–V. By law, an eight-factor analysis (8-FA) provides the primary pharmacological and public health basis for drug scheduling (Food and Drug Administration, 2017a; Belouin and Henningfield, 2018; Johnson et al., 2018). This assessment focuses on kratom and its alkaloids, in particular mitragynine (MG), the primary alkaloid in kratom present in sufficient amounts to account for its effects.

Kratom and its alkaloids are not approved for any therapeutic use by the FDA, are not federally controlled in the US, nor in the International Drug Control Conventions; however some countries do control kratom and/or its two primary alkaloids, MG and 7-OH-MG (Prozialeck et al., 2019; International Narcotics C, 2020a; International Narcotics C, 2020b). Six states in the US (Alabama, Arkansas, Indiana, Tennessee, Vermont and Wisconsin) have banned kratom, while five have passed consumer protection legislation to ensure consumer access to kratom with a framework for regulatory oversight (Arizona, Georgia, Nevada, Oklahoma and Utah). Maryland rejected a proposed ban and passed a minimum age of purchase law (age 21), and at this writing, several states are considering their own kratom consumer protection laws to ensure consumer access but with regulatory oversight. In 2021, Thailand decriminalized kratom farming, possession and sales. In December, 2021, the World Health Organization Expert Committee on Drug Dependence concluded "there is insufficient evidence to recommend a critical review of kratom mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine" [for potential scheduling] but should be kept under surveillance (Commission on Narcotic Drugs, 2021).

In August 2016 the US Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) proposed scheduling kratom on a temporary "emergency" basis but withdrew the proposal due to thousands of comments from kratom consumers and bipartisan members of Congress, and out of concern that people who were managing their opioid use disorder with the aid of kratom would return to opioid use. The DEA requested that FDA perform a full 8-FA and develop its own independent recommendations related to scheduling (Ingraham, 2016a; Ingraham, 2016b). Subsequently, Dr. Henningfield and his colleagues at PinneyAssociates were commissioned by the American Kratom Association's legal regulatory counsel to develop an 8-FA (Pinney Associates (2016)) for submission to DEA by December 2, 2016. In November 2017, FDA Commissioner Scott Gottlieb announced that kratom carried "narcotic like" risks of addiction and death but did not make public its October 17th recommendation to DEA to permanently place MG and 7-OH-MG in Schedule I of the CSA (Food and Drug Administration, 2017b; Food and Drug Administration, 2017c).

DEA typically responds to formal 8-FA scheduling requests within 90 days, though there is no legal timeline; however, a formal scheduling rescission order was issued on August 18, 2018 from the Assistant Secretary of Health, US Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) (Giroir, 2018). The order included conclusions based on a DHHS review consistent with those of the Henningfield et al. (2018) 8-FA (Henningfield et al., 2018a). The DHHS rescission letter stated "mitragynine does not satisfy the first of the three statutory requisites for Schedule I"; "There is still debate among reputable scientists over whether kratom by itself is associated with fatal overdoses"; and "there is a significant risk of immediate adverse public health consequences for potentially millions of users if kratom or its components are included in Schedule I." The letter also raised concerns about "the stifling effect of classification in Schedule l on critical research needed on the complex and potentially useful chemistry of components of kratom." This letter was not made public until January 2021.

In 2017, the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) substantially increased its active research program on kratom's alkaloids and derivatives as potentially safer and less abusable medicines for pain and addiction and other disorders. The purpose of this review is to provide an update of our 2018 article on the abuse potential of kratom. It includes more than 100 new studies related to kratom abuse potential, safety, patterns of use, and potential therapeutic and public health benefits.

2 METHODS

The intent was to include all new studies published in English relevant to kratom abuse potential, safety and mechanisms of action published in since January 1, 2018 with some essential earlier studies mentioned and referenced to our 2018 review.[1] This was by comprehensive online literature searches, and direct requests to leading kratom researchers worldwide. To be concise, factors 4, 5, and 6 are considered a single group of public health related factors.[2] (Henningfield et al., 2018a; Johnson et al., 2018). Factor 8 is unchanged as neither kratom nor its constituents are scheduled.

[1]The authors welcome communications from readers on abuse-potential and safety related kratom research published since 2018 that we might have missed.

[2]For formal FDA submissions Factors 4, 5, and 6 are considered separately (see Henningfield et al., 2018a and Johnson, Griffiths, Hendricks and Henningfield, 2018 as examples), however, for temporary (also known as "emergency") scheduling, determining if a substance poses an imminent health risk is based on the analysis of all three factors combined similarly to our approach in this review.

3 RESULTS

3.1 Factor 1: Actual or Relative Potential for Abuse

A summary of the references used, along with main findings and comments from the authors of this review are included in Table 1.

3.1.1 Summary of 2018 Findings

There were no animal intravenous drug self-administration (IV DSA), intracranial self-stimulation (ICSS) brain reward, or physical dependence/withdrawal studies of kratom's alkaloids; however, other data suggested relatively low abuse potential as compared to opioids and other drugs of abuse (Henningfield et al., 2018a). There was evidence of morphine opioid receptor (MOR) mediated effects, and preliminary drug discrimination and conditioned place preference (CPP) studies with rats suggested abuse related effects at high intolerable human dose equivalents.

Survey data from the US and field studies in Southeast Asia (SEA) showed most kratom use was for health-related benefits, and to facilitate occupational performance. Data indicated that problem abuse and addiction were not common and was generally more tolerable and readily self-manageable as compared to opioids. A frequent reason for use was as an opioid substitute for pain and self-management of opioid, alcohol, and other drug dependence.

3.1.2 Factor 1 Science Updates

3.1.2.1 Intravenous Drug Self-Administration Trials

Rates of MG self-administration were similar to those of saline, and MG pretreatment produced dose-related reductions in morphine self-administration rates (Hemby et al., 2019). The authors concluded "The present findings indicate that MG does not have abuse potential and reduces morphine intake, desired characteristics of candidate pharmacotherapies for opiate addiction and withdrawal … ". 7-OH-MG was self-administered at high doses and pretreatment increased morphine self-administration.

MG self-administration rates in rats did not exceed those obtained with saline and MG pretreatment decreased heroin self-administration, with little effect on methamphetamine self-administration (Yue et al., 2018). The authors noted "These results suggest limited abuse liability of mitragynine and the potential for mitragynine treatment to specifically reduce opioid abuse. With the current prevalence of opioid abuse and misuse, it appears currently that mitragynine is deserving of more extensive exploration for its development or that of an analog as a medical treatment for opioid abuse." These results are consistent with human reports that kratom is useful in the management of opioid craving and withdrawal and to support opioid abstinence (Grundmann et al., 2018; Coe et al., 2019; Prozialeck et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020).

Intracranial Self-Stimulation

In the ICSS model, rats equipped with brain electrodes self-deliver rewarding electrical brain stimulation. Opioids, amphetamine-like stimulants, cocaine, and other classic drugs of abuse reduce the stimulation threshold and increase the strength of the rewarding effects of drugs on ICSS (Negus and Miller, 2014). Neither MG nor 7-OH-MG showed evidence of brain rewarding effects, whereas morphine robustly and dose-dependently decreased the stimulation threshold (Behnood-Rod et al., 2020). Thus, the ICSS results suggest lower brain rewarding effects of MG as compared to morphine.

Drug Discrimination Studies

The discriminative stimulus effects of MG were evaluated in studies designed to assess generalization to morphine as well as the delta-opioid receptor agonist SNC80 and kappa-opioid receptor agonist U69593, alpha adrenergic agonists lofexidine, clonidine and phenylephrine, alpha adrenergic antagonists yohimbine and atipamezole, and the cannabinoid agonist Δ-9-tetrahydrocannabinol (Reeve et al., 2020). The strongest generalization was to lofexidine and phenylephrine, both unscheduled drugs: phenylephrine is in some over-the-counter cold medicines; lofexidine is approved for several indications including the first nonopioid for alleviating opioid withdrawal.

In a comparison of MG and 7-OH-MG across studies that included in vitro receptor binding and an antinociception test, MG partially generalized to morphine, whereas 7-OH-MG fully generalized to morphine in rats (Obeng et al., 2021). Similarly, Hiranita et al. (2020) found only partial generalization of oral MG to i.p. morphine in rats (Hiranita et al., 2020).

3.1.2.4 Conditioned Place Preference

Various MG preparations produced mixed CPP effects with some suggesting abuse potential at high doses. A low priming injection of MG or morphine reinstated CPP after establishment with either drug, suggesting rewarding effects for both (Japarin et al., 2021). Baclofen pretreatment prevented the acquisition and expression of MG-induced CPP (Yusoff et al., 2018). CPP was achieved in mice with a high dose methanolic extract of kratom leaves (Vijeepallam et al., 2019). In a fourth study (see also Factor 2), lyophilized (freeze-dried) kratom tea (LKT), a potential treatment for pain and opioid dependence, did not induce CPP in mice (Wilson et al., 2020).

3.1.2.5 Physical Dependence and Withdrawal

Discontinuation of morphine administration produced response rate disruptions indicating significant signs of spontaneous withdrawal, whereas discontinuation of MG administration did not produce significant signs of spontaneous withdrawal. Naloxone administration did precipitate response rate disruptions indicating withdrawal in both MG and morphine treated rats, however, this withdrawal effect was weaker and shorter lived in MG treated rats as compared to morphine treated rats (Harun et al., 2020). MG treatment also reduced naloxone precipitated withdrawal in animals receiving chronic morphine, consistent with human reports. Hassan, Pike, See, Sreenlivasan et al. (2020) compared the efficacy of MG to methadone for treating morphine withdrawal in rats concluding that MG treatment attenuated withdrawal symptoms significantly, similar to methadone and buprenorphine, and potentially with less undesired effects (Hassan et al., 2020).

Factor 7—The psychic or physiological dependence liability
Science Updates	(Hemby et al., 2019), (Coe et al., 2019)-(Garcia-Romeu et al. 2020), (Swogger and Walsh, 2018), (Harun et al., 2021b)-(Vicknasingam et al., 2020), (Grundmann, 2017), (Grundmann et al., 2021), (Swogger et al., 2015; Smith and Lawson, 2017; Singh et al., 2018c; Leong Bin Abdullah et al., 2021)	Some chronic, frequent kratom users report dependence/addition and/or withdrawal, but this is generally more readily self-managed compared to use disorders of other drugs of abuse

Although MG withdrawal signs are weak in rats compared to those from morphine withdrawal, there does appear to be evidence of physical dependence; however, MG withdrawal unlike morphine was not associated with anxiogenic-like subjective symptoms. When using a pentylenetetrazol (PTZ) discrimination trial to evaluate anxiogenic signs in rats after MG or morphine withdrawal precipitated by naloxone, MG showed no substitution to the PTZ discriminative stimulus, while morphine produced a dose-related PTZ-like stimulus, further supporting MG as a novel pharmacotherapeutic intervention for managing opioid use disorder (Johari et al., 2021).

Other studies of opioid or MG withdrawal suggested that specific brain proteins might serve as more sensitive biomarkers for physiological dependence in rats as compared to behavioral signs (Hassan et al., 2021). Clonidine treatment may attenuate MG withdrawal signs in rats (Hassan et al., 2021). Another recent study employed an open-field test and an elevated-plus maze test to evaluate naloxone-precipitated withdrawal from MG as compared to morphine, and provided additional evidence confirming that MG can induce physical dependence and measurable signs of withdrawal in rats (Harun et al., 2021a). Overall, the research is consistent with human reports that kratom withdrawal is generally more modest and more readily self-manageable than that produced by opioids (e.g., 22 and as discussed in Factor 7).

3.1.2.6 Real World Evidence of Abuse and Dependence

Factors 4–6 discuss the public health aspects of kratom use; however, many of the same studies address Factor 1 concerning evidence for abuse and are mentioned here.

As reported by Henningfield, et al. (2018), although surveys and anecdotal reports in the US and SEA confirm that some kratom consumers reported "addiction" those studies also indicated that use "to get high" is relatively low as compared to opioids and other recreational drugs of abuse, and that use by smoking, injecting, and/or insufflating was rare as compared to opioids, stimulants and other recreational drugs (Henningfield et al., 2018a). Recent studies confirm that kratom intake can lead to dependence and withdrawal in some kratom users, but these are substantially less likely to interfere with family, social and occupational life and commitments as compared to opioid dependence. Moreover, kratom is widely viewed as a healthier and less life-impairing substance to replace drugs such as opioids, alcohol, and stimulants (Singh et al., 2014; Galbis-Reig, 2016; Swogger and Walsh, 2018; Prozialeck et al., 2019).

A variety of reports confirm kratom use to self-manage opioid withdrawal and that abstinence from high chronic kratom use is typically associated with milder symptomatology than abstinence from classical opioids (Grundmann et al., 2018; Smith et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020). The conclusion of Prozialeck et al. (2019) and Grundmann et al. (2018) (Grundmann et al., 2018; Prozialeck et al., 2019) were further strengthened by two published US surveys which found that the overwhelming majority of kratom consumers reported that their use was for various health benefits and not for recreational purposes (Coe et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020; Harun et al., 2021b).

3.1.3 Factor 1 Updated Conclusion

Diverse scientific approaches were employed to profile MG's abuse potential, finding no evidence of rewarding effects in the IV self-administration and ICSS models, and weak evidence of potential reward in the CPP procedure. MG only partially generalizes to morphine and more fully generalizes to the nonscheduled alpha-adrenergic agonists, phenylephrine and lofexidine. The new data suggest relatively low abuse potential as compared to morphine-like opioids, stimulants, and other drugs of abuse that demonstrate robust rewarding effects across all such abuse potential models. Similarly, MG's potential to produce physical dependence and withdrawal appears relatively low, but not absent, as compared to opioids in animal models. These findings are generally consistent with human reports that MG has a relatively low abuse and withdrawal potential as compared to recreationally used opioids but can reduce opioid self-administration and withdrawal. Surveys indicate that reducing opioid self-administration and withdrawal are among the most common reasons for kratom use in the US (also discussed in Factors 4, 5, and 6). New studies discussed in Factors 2–7 contribute further to the understanding of kratom's abuse potential, including its public health risks and benefits, that are part of the 8-factor abuse potential assessment.

3.2 Factor 2—Scientific Evidence of its Pharmacological Effects

3.2.1 Summary of 2018 Findings

MG and 7-OH-MG have some MOR mediated effects, but 7-OH-MG occurs at low concentrations in kratom leaves and is absent in many kratom product derivatives suggesting that the effects reported by kratom consumers are due primarily to MG. Some kratom effects were shown to be naloxone reversible (e.g., "pain" tolerance); however, MG and 7-OH-MG mechanisms of action were diverse and mediated by non-opioid transmitters and pathways (Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018). Thus, characterization of MG as an opioid "analog" or "narcotic like opioid" is not consistent with the overall evidence, leading Henningfield et al. (2018) to conclude "More research is clearly needed to elucidate receptor binding profiles and the diverse and probably complex mechanisms of action of the kratom alkaloids singly, in combination, and as commonly occur in marketed products and brewed extracts" (Henningfield et al., 2018a).

3.2.2 Factor 2 Science Updates

3.2.2.1 Potential Therapeutic Effects

Although neither kratom nor any of its alkaloids are approved for therapeutic use for any disorder, surveys discussed in Factors 4, 5, and 6—History and Current Patterns of Abuse; the Scope, Significance and Duration of Abuse; what, if Any, Risk is There to the Public Health and elsewhere (Henningfield et al., 2018a; Grundmann et al., 2018; Swogger and Walsh, 2018; Coe et al., 2019; Prozialeck et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020) show individuals in the US and around the world describe using kratom for its health benefits. Research characterizing kratom's effects, mechanisms of action, and therapeutic kratom alkaloid use rapidly advanced since 2018. In a placebo-controlled cold pressor task evaluating anti-nociceptive effects, pain tolerance was significantly increased following consumption of a kratom tea-type decoction similar to Malaysian preparations (Vicknasingam et al., 2020). These data provided "the first objectively measured evidence obtained in controlled research with human subjects that are preliminarily supporting or confirming previously published reports of kratom pain relieving properties based on self-reports collected in observational studies".

Consistent with Vicknasingam et al. (2020)'s clinical findings, oral LKT administration to mice produced dose-related antinociceptive effects at doses that did not alter locomotion or produce CPP; there were brief, non-life threatening decreases in respiration (Behnood-Rod et al., 2020). Repeated LKT administration produced no physical dependence, but significantly decreased naloxone-precipitated withdrawal in morphine dependent mice, confirming MOR agonist activity and therapeutic LKT effect for treating pain and opioid physical dependence.

After investigating in vitro receptor binding affinity and in vivo morphine discrimination, antinociception in the "heated plate" pain test, and naloxone challenge tests in rats, the authors concluded "At human m-opioid receptor (MOR) in vitro, mitragynine has low affinity and is an antagonist . . . ". Overall, 7-OH-MG had stronger MOR mediated effects including antinociception (Obeng et al., 2021). An extensive series of tests characterized several minor indole and oxindole alkaloids that the authors suggest are insufficient in abundance to account for the biological effects of kratom but may show promise for the development of potential medicines including potential new chemical entities (Chakraborty et al., 2021a).

Several of these studies showed MOR mediated antinociceptive effects with little evidence of respiratory depression suggesting the potential to contribute to new generations of nonopioid analgesics.

3.2.2.2 Mechanisms of Action

Although kratom produces some effects in common with opioids, and some of its alkaloid's actions are mediated by MOR receptors, its effects and mechanisms of action are diverse and include non-opioid mechanisms of action and non-opioid acting constituent alkaloids, as discussed in earlier reviews (Henningfield et al., 2018a; Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018; Prozialeck et al., 2019). In 2021, Leon et al. (2021) investigated several alkaloids, including mitragynine, paynantheine and speciogynine that produce serotonergic effects potentially mediated by their metabolites. As the authors discuss, such actions would be consistent with some of the mood enhancing effects attributed to kratom (Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018; Sharma and McCurdy, 2021).

Kratom contains approximately 1–2% MG by weight, as well as other alkaloids (including 7-OH-MG) that typically are present at such low levels in kratom leaf material that it is uncertain if they contribute to kratom effects (Prozialeck et al., 2019). 7-OH-MG is present in low concentrations in natural kratom products, but gradually emerges in vivo as a MG metabolite. Kruegel et al. (2019) studied its role as a mediator of MG effects (Kruegel et al., 2019) summarizing "7-hydroxymitragynine is formed from mitragynine in mice and . . . brain concentrations of this metabolite are sufficient to explain most or all of the opioid-receptor-mediated analgesic activity of mitragynine . . . it suggests a possible explanation for the seemingly improved safety profile of mitragynine compared to classical opioid agonists . . . We believe mitragynine and related compounds have great potential as future therapeutics, but metabolic processes must be carefully considered as the field continues to advance." Hiranita, Sharma, Oyola et al. (2020) reported although "the conversion rate of 7-hydroxymitragynine from p.o. mitragynine is low, 7-hydroxymitragynine is a more potent and efficacious μ-opioid receptor agonist than mitragynine, suggesting that conversion to this metabolite may contribute to the in vivo μ-opioid activity of mitragynine" (Behnood-Rod et al., 2020).

Kratom is commonly consumed to enhance occupational performance and as a coffee substitute for energy at low doses. In an animal model of spatial learning and memory, high doses impaired memory (Hassan et al., 2019). Suhaimi, Hassan, Mansor and Müller (2021) reported changes in brain electroencephalogram (EEG) activity after acute and chronic MG exposure in rats, with strong effects on some measures at high doses, supporting the importance of more research on brain function and potential cognitive effects (Suhaimi et al., 2021).

Gutridge et al. (2020) pharmacologically characterized interactions between kratom extracts, kratom alkaloids, and synthetic carfentanil-amide opioids with G-proteins and beta-arrestin at mu, delta and kappa opioid receptors in vitro, and assessed whether they had rewarding properties and the degree to which they reduced alcohol intake (Gutridge et al., 2020). The authors concluded that "kratom alkaloids do not recruit β-arrestin 2 at the μOP, δOP, and κOP and can significantly reduce both moderate and binge alcohol intake in male and female mice. This pharmacological profile and effect on alcohol intake in rodents may explain why some find kratom useful to self-medicate for alcohol use disorder." These findings were further supported by the findings by Todd et al. (2020) who concluded "mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine demonstrate functional selectivity for G-protein signaling, with no measurable recruitment of β-arrestin. Overall, the study demonstrates the unique binding and functional profiles of the kratom alkaloids, suggesting potential utility for managing pain, but further studies are needed to follow up on these in vitro findings" (Todd et al., 2020).

Hiranita et al. (2019) compared the effects of MG to morphine in behavioral and antinociception assays in rat models finding "Opioid receptors do not appear to mediate the disruptive effects of mitragynine on learned behavior. Mitragynine had lesser antinociceptive effects than morphine, and these did not appear to be mediated by opioid receptors. The pharmacology of mitragynine includes a substantial non-opioid mechanism" (Hiranita et al., 2019).

3.2.2.3 Studies of Kratom Minor Alkaloids and Their Metabolites, and Analogs

Advances in analytical methods are accelerating our understanding of the effects of numerous kratom alkaloids including liquid chromatography–tandem mass spectrometry assays that quantify kratom alkaloids in kratom leaf extracts and commercial products (Sharma et al., 2019).

Most of these alkaloids are present at de minimis levels with respect to human experience, effects, and safety; however, it is possible that while the majority of natural plant-based kratom preparation effects are mediated by MG, one or more minor alkaloids may also play a minor role and account for differences in kratom strains (Kruegel et al., 2019; Chear et al., 2021).

An in vitro pharmacological characterization of five kratom based minor alkaloids found that their low abundance made it unlikely that these alkaloids play a major mediating role in the biological actions of kratom consumed by humans, but this research may contribute to furthering the understanding of kratom mechanisms of action and opioid receptor function (Chakraborty et al., 2021a).

Kratom alkaloids are of interest as templates for novel synthesized molecules (i.e., analogs) for new medicines. One third to one half of FDA-approved medicines are based on natural plant product substances from which novel chemical entities were developed (Newman and Cragg, 2016; Domnic et al., 2021a). Such efforts are actively in progress characterizing a variety of indole and oxindole alkaloids, determining their chemical structures, and binding affinities for opioid and other receptors (Chear et al., 2021). One approach to the synthesis of novel MG analogs produced several partial MOR agonists with low G-protein activation (Chakraborty et al., 2021b). These analogs demonstrated robust analgesic effects but low respiratory depressant, locomotor, and conditioned place preference suggesting lower adverse effects including abuse potential.

Combinations of kratom alkaloids may inhibit cell proliferation and migration of nasopharyngeal carcinoma cells suggesting alkaloid or new analogs as potential cancer treatments (Domnic et al., 2021b).

3.2.2.4 MG Metabolism and Metabolite Profiling

Thirteen MG metabolites were identified in human liver microsomes (HLM) and S9 fraction studies (Kamble et al., 2019), and potential MG and other kratom alkaloids drug interactions were investigated including with pharmaceutic products (Kamble et al., 2020a).

7-OH-MG can be converted to pseudoindoxyl-MG in human plasma to a greater extent than is produced in mice, rats, dogs and cynomolgus monkeys, possibly explaining potential human effects and benefits that may not be predicted in animal studies alone (Kamble et al., 2020b).

3.2.3 Factor 2 Updated Conclusion

Kratom's main effects are due to the consumption of MG, but other minor alkaloids and metabolites, including 7-OH-MG, may also contribute to effects reported by consumers. Since 2018, many scientific advances improved our understanding of how these alkaloids and metabolites interact. Some alkaloids that contribute little to the effects of kratom may ultimately contribute to safer and more effective new medicines for a variety of disorders, as well as for general health and well-being. Development and approval of such products may be a decade or more in the future, but this rapidly advancing science is explaining how kratom works, and why its pain relieving, and other benefits occur with relatively low levels of abuse, dependence, and harmful decreases in respiration compared to opioids.

3.3 Factor 3—The State of Current Scientific Knowledge Regarding the Drug

3.3.1 Summary of 2018 Findings

The 2018 8-FA highlighted kratom's pharmacodynamic effects. Preclinical anti-nociceptive studies suggested that MG and 7-OH-MG produced such effects mediated by MOR receptors. Most information about the effects of long-term use in humans on various physiological, and cognitive parameters was based on anecdotal reports, case histories, and preliminary field studies in SEA. A two-compartment model best described human oral MG pharmacokinetics (Trakulsrichai et al., 2015).

3.3.2 Factor 3 Science Updates

New kratom pharmacokinetics studies in rats, mice and dogs document plasma MG, 7-OH-MG, and other alkaloids and minor metabolites over 12 h or more, with accompanying safety assessments. Six new clinical studies following long-term kratom use provide safety data on health, and organ and brain function were also conducted.

3.3.2.1 Pharmacokinetics and Pharmacodynamics Findings Related to MG and 7-OH-MG Safety

After oral administration of traditional or other natural kratom formulations to rats, greater systemic exposure was observed than that of an equivalent oral MG dose alone; no adverse events were reported (Avery et al., 2019).

Administration of 5 mg/kg oral MG (equivalent to approximately 3 mg/kg in humans) and 0.1 mg/kg IV MG to beagle dogs was well tolerated and produced no adverse events or major abnormalities in clinical parameters (Maxwell et al., 2020).

The estimated MG clearance (CL/F) was 2.21 L/h, absorption rate (Ka) 0.82/h, and volume of distribution (Vd) 30.8 L after oral 20, 40, and 80 mg/kg MG doses to rats (Jagabalan et al., 2019). Oral 55 mg/kg MG produced 85 ng/ml Cmax for 7-OH-MG, 14 times lower than the MG Cmax. Anti-nociception after IV MG and 7-OH-MG suggested that 7-OH-MG was more potent and efficacious than MG, and metabolic formation of 7-OH-MG contributes to in vivo MOR mediated effects of oral MG (Hiranita et al., 2020).

3.3.2.2 Pharmacokinetic and Pharmacodynamic Findings With Kratom's Minor Alkaloids

MG, 7-OH-MG, corynantheidine, speciogynine, speciociliatine, paynantheine, corynoxine, corynoxine-B, mitraphylline, ajmalicine, and isospeciofoline were analyzed in rat plasma after a variety of oral kratom products, with only MG, 7-OH-MG, speciociliatine, and corynantheidine quantifiable at 8 h (Kamble et al., 2021).

Speciociliatine pharmacokinetics were characterized following IV and oral dosing to help understand the potential contribution of this alkaloid to in vivo kratom administration effects (Berthold et al., 2021). Speciociliatine had higher systemic exposure and lower clearance compared to the other kratom alkaloids mitragynine and corynantheidine. Similarly, the pharmacokinetics of corynanthidine, a minor kratom alkaloid and perhaps a MOR antagonist, were determined after 2.5 mg/kg IV and 20 mg/kg oral doses to rats, yielding a 50% oral bioavailability, a 4.1 h Tmax and extensive distribution including in brain corpus callosum and hippocampus regions (King et al., 2020).

3.3.2.3 Safety Assessments From Clinical Studies

Kratom's anti-nociceptive effects in the cold pressor test are described in Factor 2 and its potential for physiological dependence and withdrawal are discussed in Factor 7 (Vicknasingam et al., 2020). This section summarizes six new clinical studies that assessed health and safety endpoints.

Leong Bin Abdullah et al. (2020) studied the lipid profiles, liver function and blood chemistries in 100 chronic kratom users and 100 healthy nonusers in Malaysia finding that the "liver parameters of the study participants were within normal range. The serum total cholesterol and LDL of kratom users were significantly lower than those of healthy subjects who do not use kratom. There were no significant differences in the serum triglyceride and HDL levels. However, higher average daily frequency of kratom use and increasing age were associated with increased serum total cholesterol among kratom users."

Singh, Muller, Murugaiyah et al. (2018) studied various hematological and clinical-chemistry parameters of kratom users in Malaysia (Singh et al., 2018a). They interviewed and collected blood samples from 58 "regular kratom users" and 19 "healthy controls." Findings showed there were no significant differences in the hematological and clinical-chemistry parameters of traditional kratom users and healthy controls, except for HDL and LDL cholesterol values; these were found to be above the normal reference range for the users. Similarly, long-term kratom consumption (>5 years), and quantity of daily kratom use (≥3 ½ glasses; mitragynine content 76.3–114.8 mg) did not appear to alter the hematological and biochemical parameters of kratom users. These data suggest that even long-term and heavy kratom consumption did not significantly alter the hematological and clinical-chemistry parameters of kratom users in a traditional setting.

Singh, Narayanan, Grundmann et al. (2020), studied the long-term effects of kratom use in thirteen people in Malaysia who used kratom longer than 20 years in a cross-sectional pilot study (Singh et al., 2020a). They summarized their results as follows: "Respondents were required to undergo a blood-test and laboratory analysis was conducted to determine the mitragynine content in an acquired street sample of kratom. The regular, long-term consumption of brewed kratom decoction did not cause any significant alterations in haematological, kidney, liver, thyroid, inflammatory and gastrointestinal analytes in a cohort of kratom users who had no history of substance misuse. However, those who had a higher intake (>3 glasses per day) of kratom exhibited higher lipid values (except for HDL-cholesterol), and a moderate elevation of homocysteine level. Long-term (>20 years with a daily intake of ≥87.54 mg mitragynine) kratom consumption was not associated with altered biochemical levels, although prolonged and chronic, frequent use (>3 glasses daily) may result in cardiovascular risks." Note that this study was not designed to determine if kratom or other factors contributed to higher lipid values.

Singh, Chye, Suo et al. (2018) conducted a preliminary study of the impact of kratom use on brain function, as assessed by brain magnetic resonance imaging, among chronic kratom users in Malaysia. They reported "There were no significant differences ($p > 0.05$) in the intracranial volume (ICV), cortical volumes (frontal, parietal, temporal, occipital, or cingulate lobe), or subcortical volumes (striatum, hippocampus, or amygdala), as well as in the diffusion tensor imaging (DTI) metrics, fractional anisotropy (FA) and mean diffusivity (MD) between kratom users and the controls. This preliminary study showed long-term consumption of kratom decoction is not significantly associated with altered brain structures in regular kratom users in traditional settings" (Singh et al., 2018b).

Singh, Narayanan, Muller et al. (2019) studied potential long-term cognitive effects associated with kratom use in kratom uses in Malaysia with assessments performed using the Cambridge Neuropsychological Test Automated Battery (Singh et al., 2019a). Relative to control participants, higher consumption (>3 glasses daily or mitragynine doses between 72.5 and 74.9 mg) of kratom tea was selectively associated with impaired performance on the Paired Associates Learning task of the Cambridge Neuropsychological Test Automated Battery, reflecting deficits in visual episodic memory and new learning.

Leong Bin Abdullah, Tan, et al., evaluated the prevalence of ECG abnormalities and QTc intervals in kratom users without histories of illicit drug use. Sinus tachycardia was higher in kratom users. Daily kratom consumption was associated with borderline QTc intervals (Leong Abdullah et al., 2021). Another study by Leong Bin Abdullah and Singh found that people who consumed four or more glasses of kratom tea daily had higher MG concentrations than lower intake consumers and this higher intake was associated with prolonged QTc intervals (Leong Bin Abdullah and Singh, 2021a). The same authors published a comprehensive review of the cardiovascular and cardiotoxic effects of kratom and came to the conclusion that limitations in studies to date do not permit definitive conclusions about the cardiovascular risks (Leong Bin Abdullah and Singh, 2021b).

3.3.3 Factor 3 Updated Conclusion

Pharmacokinetics and safety data from multiple species, kratom preparations, alkaloids, and metabolites; advances in bioanalytical assays providing more accurate and reliable findings; and data from multiple studies with MG doses many times higher than those human kratom users take are now available. These studies add to those described in Factors 1 and 2 confirming little evidence of serious adverse or life-threatening effects over a broad range of doses, dosage forms, and in four species (mouse, rat, dog, and monkey).

Other major advances in kratom science come from six clinical studies of long term kratom use effects and safety, as well as the study of anti-nociceptive effects of kratom and physiological dependence described in Factors 2 and 7. These important advances in kratom science evaluated the effects of long-term kratom use on a variety of physiological parameters including kidney and liver function, hematological parameters, cognition, and on brain function by brain magnetic resonance imaging. Although relatively small studies, none suggest serious adverse consequences of use. It is important to note that these are not definitive safety studies and cannot be used to claim that kratom has no adverse effects on any of the studied physiological domains and limitations of each study were noted in the publications. Nonetheless, the findings are encouraging and should facilitate the conduct of more comprehensive follow-up studies.

3.4 Factors 4, 5, and 6—History and Current Patterns of Abuse; the Scope, Significance and Duration of Abuse; what, if Any, Risk is There to the Public Health

3.4.1 Summary of 2018 Findings

Note that for this update, Factors 4, 5, and 6 are considered together because they all contribute to understanding nonmedical use, recreational use and abuse, and public health impact, relying on some of the same surveys across factors. The Henningfield et al., 2018 8-FA considered all major relevant federal surveys, as well as data from internet monitoring, and more than 20,200 comments to the DEA, and concluded that there was no evidence of an imminent public health threat associated with kratom (Henningfield et al., 2018a). To the contrary, the review concluded that there were foreseeable health risks including opioid overdose and deaths if lawful kratom was banned and possession criminalized. Moreover, although kratom is not approved as safe and effective for therapeutic use, it was evident that most kratom use in the US was for health and well-being by people who personally found kratom to be more effective, tolerable, accessible and/or preferred a natural product as compared to FDA approved medicines.

3.4.2 Factors 4, 5, and 6 Science Updates

3.4.2.1 U.S. National and Federal Survey Data

Table 2 summarizes the main findings from the major national and federal surveys and other data sources. Overall, there are more similarities than differences with respect to demographics reported in this table as well as in other demographics reported in the published survey results. Prevalence appears to be substantially underestimated by the NSDUH and RADARS surveys (U.S. Department of health and Human Services, 2020; Schimmel et al., 2021).

NSDUH, RADARS, and Covvey et al. did not report reasons for use; however, many kratom users reported past or present use of opioids and/or drug addiction treatment consistent with past findings that self-management of addiction and withdrawal is a common reason for kratom use (National Institute on Drug Abuse, 2019; Coe et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020; U.S. Department of health and Human Services, 2020; Schimmel et al., 2021; Covvey et al., 2020; Grundmann, 2017). Survey data incidence reports for DAWN, MTFS, NFLIS, and TEDS are apparently below the threshold for reporting as confirmed in an inquiry to NFLIS (Drug Enforcement Administration, 2020a; Drug Abuse Warning Network, 2020; Substance Abuse and Mental, 2020).

These findings do not support the conclusion that kratom use represents an imminent health threat and in fact kratom is not listed in the most recent DEA National Drug Threat Assessment (Drug Enforcement Administration, 2020b). There is no evidence that kratom is "fueling" or otherwise contributing to the opioid epidemic, though the survey data suggest that it is an informal self-management approach supporting the efforts of many opioid users to reduce and discontinue opioid use (Grundmann, 2017; Coe et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020; Grundmann et al., 2021).

3.4.2.2 Kratom Use Prevalence

As mentioned in Table 2, the NSDUH and RADARS surveys may greatly underestimate the US prevalence and incidence of kratom use, with estimates of past year kratom use of 1,790,00–2,040,000.[3] (U.S. Department of health and Human Services, 2020; Schimmel et al., 2021). In contrast, a credible estimate based on market data suggested prevalence of 3–5 million in 2014–2015 (Botanical Education Allia, 2016).

Experts and marketers agree that the kratom market substantially expanded since that time, with kratom export data from Indonesia to the US and major marketer consensus finding that the US consumer base was likely 10–16 million. This is consistent with a nationally projectable survey estimate from 2020 concluding past year kratom use as 4.1% or 10,500,000 kratom users (Covvey et al., 2020).

3.4.2.3 Kratom Use Associated Mortality

The two most widely cited estimates of kratom associated mortality are based on world-wide reports over nearly 10 years (Food and Drug Administration, 2018; Olsen et al., 2019). FDA's statement noted that all but one involved other substances, and that case was under further investigation.[4] Medical examiners or coroners reported kratom as the cause of death in 91 (59.9%) of 152 kratom positive decedents (out of 27,338 overdose deaths in 27 states), including seven for whom kratom was the only substance positive on postmortem toxicology, although other substances could not be ruled out (Olsen et al., 2019). In approximately 80% of kratom positive or "involved" deaths, decedents had a history of "substance misuse", with 65% of cases listing fentanyl as the cause of death, 32.9% heroin, followed by benzodiazepines, prescription opioids, and cocaine. An earlier study (Gershman et al., 2019) cautioned that comprehensive toxicology might identify other substances contributing or causing death. We are not aware that any of the 93,000 drug overdoses estimated for 2020 included deaths due to kratom. That does not mean that there were no deaths in which kratom was the primary cause or a contributing factor; however, the signal is clearly low.

An assessment of various survey data concluded that the risk of kratom associated death was at least a thousand times lower than for morphine-like opioids (Henningfield et al., 2019). This is consistent with NIDA's position (National Institute on Drug Abuse, 2019) and with the 2018 DHHS kratom scheduling rescission letter and the conclusions drawn by Assistant Secretary of Health Brett P. Giroir, MD, ADM who stated:

[3]Note in a summary of RADARS data presented a few months after the Schimmel et al., 2020 publication, it was reported that the national projected past year prevalence estimate was 3.35 million.

[4]FDA never reported the results of that investigation, however, the US DHHS review that led to the 2018 withdrawal of the 2017 MG and 7-OH-MG CSA scheduling recommendation determined that the incident in question was an automobile crash not attributable to kratom use.

See Grundmann et al., 2021 and Henningfield et al., 2021 comment on apparent under estimation of kratom use prevalence (Grundmann et al., 2021; Henningfield et al., 2021)

"There is still debate among reputable scientists over whether kratom by itself is associated with fatal overdoses" (Giroir, 2018).

3.4.2.4 Mortality Risks Projected as a Result of Banning Licit Kratom

Surveys and more than 20,000 comments to the DEA suggest that many kratom users fear resumption of opioid use and the need to resort to illicit kratom markets (Drug Enforcement Adm, 2016; Grundmann, 2017; Coe et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020). It is not possible to project how many people would relapse to opioids and potentially overdose (Henningfield et al., 2018a; Henningfield et al., 2018b; Henningfield et al., 2018c; Henningfield et al., 2018d; Grundmann et al., 2018; Prozialeck et al., 2020). This was a concern of the DEA in withdrawing its 2016 kratom scheduling proposal (Ingraham, 2016b) and in the US DHHS kratom scheduling recission letter (Giroir, 2018).

3.4.2.5 Public Health and Individual Benefits of Kratom

In 2018, a systematic review of kratom use and mental health by Swogger and Walsh concluded ". . .kratom use appears to have several important mental health benefits that warrant further study. Kratom dependence is a risk for some people, though the dependence syndrome appears to be mild in its psychosocial and physiological effects relative to that of opioids. More and better research, including well-controlled, prospective studies, is necessary to further elucidate kratom's potential for good and harm and the moderators of its effects" (Swogger and Walsh, 2018). The therapeutic potential of kratom based on surveys, anecdotal reports, and nonclinical research supports the plausibility of such benefits as discussed by other reviewers (Prozialeck et al., 2019; Hemby et al., 2019; Yue et al., 2018; Grundmann et al., 2018; Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018; Sharma and McCurdy, 2021; Swogger et al., 2018; Prozialeck et al., 2021).

The most important public health benefits with respect to mortality are widely agreed upon by kratom experts and surveys, and that is its use to self-manage opioid and other drug addiction and withdrawal symptoms, and thereby reduce use and overdose from far deadlier substances. This type of use is not unique in the US but was long reported in SEA (Raffa, 2014; Henningfield et al., 2018a). This was also reported in the first major US Internet survey of kratom use (Grundmann, 2017), as well as in subsequent surveys (Coe et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020; Pain News Network (2018)). This was also a conclusion of a systematic review of 13 studies addressing kratom use and mental health in the US, SEA, and other countries and regions of the world, and a review by an international consortium of kratom researchers (Swogger and Walsh, 2018; Prozialeck et al., 2019).

While the opioid epidemic represents a highly visible and deadly epidemic in its own right, it is important to recognize that many millions use kratom as their preferred approach to managing other life-threatening disorders including pain, depression, anxiety, post-traumatic stress, fibromyalgia and more (Drug Enforcement Adm, 2016; Grundmann, 2017; Coe et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020).

3.4.2.6 Kratom Use for Managing Opioid Use/Withdrawal and Other Health Reasons

In the first half-year of the COVID-19 pandemic, there was uncertainty about kratom supply by vendors and consumers, however, overall US supply was not affected. The main reasons for kratom use are pain relief (48%), anxiety, "PTSD" or depression (22%), increase energy or focus (10%), and "help cut down on opioid use and/or relieve withdrawal" (10%) (Coe et al., 2019). Side effects were generally minor, e.g., stomach upset, rarely required medical attention and rates and severity of "bad reactions" were generally similar to those reported by Grundmann (Grundmann, 2017).

Field studies with face-to-face interviews in Malaysia provide complementary evidence to US Internet surveys regarding reasons for use and potential benefits (Singh et al., 2019b). Motives related to mood and other factors in 116 regular kratom users employed the Drinking Motives Questionnaire (DMQ) to measure motives for kratom use, reported "heavy" kratom use as drinking more than three glasses daily (estimating that 1 glass contains 48.24–50.4 mg of mitragynine), with use associated with significantly higher means scores on the Coping and Enhancement scales. A field face-to-face survey of 92 long-term male kratom users found that 72 participants (78%) reported using kratom to "enhance sexual performance" and all but one found did their sexual performance did improve. Interestingly, among participants who described kratom intake for other reasons, 35% reported enhanced sexual performance (Singh et al., 2020b).

Patterns and reasons for use and demographics were investigated in 142 current and 62 former opioid polydrug users in Malaysia (Singh et al., 2020c). The alkaloid content of a kratom street sample was primarily MG, followed by paynantheine, speciociliatine, speciogynine, and "low levels" of 7-OH-MG. There were no significant differences in demographic characteristics between current and former opioid polydrug users except with respect to marital status, with current kratom users having a higher odds ratio of being single. While both current and former opioid users reported using kratom to ameliorate opioid withdrawal, current users had significantly higher likelihood of using kratom for that purpose; however, former opioid users were more likely to use kratom for mood elevating effects.

3.4.2.7 Comment on Therapeutic Use in Context of FDA Standards

It is important to note that the benefits documented in published surveys do not constitute the basis for therapeutic claims and no kratom product or kratom alkaloid is approved for therapeutic use in the US. The FDA and other federal agencies state that there is no proven therapeutic use for kratom despite evidence that millions of people in the US and many more in SEA use kratom primarily for therapeutic, beneficial use. That evidence includes peer reviewed surveys and field studies in the US and SEA, clinical and preclinical studies showing that MG's mechanisms of action are consistent with such effects. Moreover, several animal models used to predict efficacy for treating opioid use disorder, opioid withdrawal and pain demonstrated efficacy.

None of this research meets FDA's standard for therapeutic efficacy that is determined by evaluation of a New Drug Application (NDA). The NDA must be supported by "substantial evidence of effectiveness," and is defined as "evidence consisting of adequate and well-controlled investigations" (Katz, 2004; Dabrowska and Thaul, 2018). The time and cost to develop and achieve FDA approval of a product as therapeutically effective and acceptably safe varies widely but is often approximated at 10 years and 1 billion dollars (DiMasi et al., 2016; Wouters et al., 2020). Only two botanical substances, Veregen® (sinecatechins) and Mytesi™ (crofelemer), were developed as drug products consistent with FDA's Botanical Drug Guidance and both are available only as prescription drugs that is typical of new drug approvals (Food and Drug Admini, 2016).

3.4.3 Factor 4, 5, and 6 Updated Conclusions

The most important finding from new US survey evidence is that the conclusion that kratom products and kratom's primary active alkaloid, MG, pose a "serious imminent threat to public health" is not supported. This extensive survey update agrees with the Henningfield et al. (2018) conclusion: "There has been no documented threat to public health that would appear to warrant emergency scheduling of the products and placement in Schedule I of the CSA carries risks of creating serious public health problems. . .. Although kratom appears to have pharmacological properties that support some level of scheduling, if it was an approved drug, placing it into Schedule I, thus banning it, risks creating public health problems that do not presently exist" (Henningfield et al., 2018a).

The evidence shows that millions of people in the US purchase and use kratom products for improving health and are preferred to FDA approved medicines because for them, kratom products are more effective, accessible, and tolerable. Furthermore, many prefer managing health problems with natural products.

For those using kratom products in place of opioids, which appears to be approximately 1/3 of all kratom users, it is foreseeable that removing kratom from the legal marketplace would put many at risk of returning to opioid use and risking opioid overdose death. This was clearly stated in comments to the DEA and public hearings as reported in the 2018 8-FA, and in surveys. Assistant Secretary Dr. Giroir noted "... there is a significant risk of immediate adverse public health consequences for potentially millions of users if kratom or its components are included in Schedule I, such as: ... Kratom users switching to highly lethal opioids, including potent and deadly prescription opioids, heroin, and/or fentanyl, risking thousands of deaths from overdoses and infectious diseases associated with IV drug use ... " (Giroir, 2018).

3.5 Factor 7—The Psychic or Physiological Dependence Liability

3.5.1 Summary of 2018 Findings

Recently, psychic dependence is referred to simply as "dependence" or "substance use disorder" and more commonly as "addiction" though definitions of addiction vary widely (American Psychiatric Asso, 1994; World Health Organization, 1994). Physiological dependence is often used interchangeably with the most common measure of physiological dependence, namely "withdrawal" which is also considered a clinical disorder (American Psychiatric Asso, 2013).

In the 2018 8-FA, Henningfield, Fant and Wang (2018) concluded "There have not been laboratory studies of physical or psychological dependence or abuse potential in humans caused by kratom." Nor had classic animal studies employing the drug self-administration and physical dependence/withdrawal model been conducted (see Factor 2 in this report)".

Nonetheless, the real-world evidence in the published literature supported the following conclusions: "...abrupt discontinuation [of kratom use] may be accompanied by withdrawal symptoms that are qualitatively similar but generally weaker than those observed following discontinuation of opioids. However, such reports make it difficult to disentangle the emergence of preexisting symptoms that had been mitigated by kratom use from those that occur as a physiological rebound accompanying the abrupt discontinuation of kratom use in kratom-dependent people. More studies of kratom's potential to produce physical dependence, tolerance, and withdrawal are needed to characterize the nature and severity, and determinants of abstinence-associated symptoms."

3.5.2 Factor 7 Science Updates

In addition to the animal laboratory studies predictive of abuse potential, dependence, and withdrawal summarized in Factor 1, there are several new studies, surveys, and expert reviews addressing the risk and factors associated with dependence and withdrawal. A major category of kratom use is related to the typically mild and tolerable dependence and withdrawal that occurs in some frequent kratom users and the resulting use of kratom as an approach to self-management. In this context, kratom provides a harm reduction alternative to opioids in particular, but also potentially for alcohol, methamphetamine, and other drugs.

Dependence and withdrawal were addressed in a systematic review of kratom use for mental health reasons that concluded "Kratom dependence is a risk for some people, though the dependence syndrome appears to be mild in its psychosocial and physiological effects relative to that of opioids ... kratom use does not appear to result in significant respiratory depression" (Swogger and Walsh, 2018). A major category of kratom use globally was to self-manage substance use disorders, consistent with the findings discussed in Factor 1 that demonstrated low abuse and physical dependence potential, and that MG administration reduced morphine and heroin self-administration, and withdrawal signs (Hemby et al., 2019; Harun et al., 2021b).

The Vicknasingam et al. (2021) study included in Factor 2 also assessed potential withdrawal signs using the Clinical Opiate Withdrawal Scale (COWS), comparing scores when participants were administered placebo or a kratom concoction (Vicknasingam et al., 2020). Although this study was not designed to be a definitive withdrawal assessment study, and did not include an opioid comparator, it was likely that people using kratom multiple times per day for many years would have experienced pronounced withdrawal symptoms. The authors concluded "None of the participants reported withdrawal symptoms either using spontaneous self-report or had significant withdrawal symptoms based on the COWS scores... All participants reported long histories of daily kratom consumption, with high frequency of daily consumption and substantial amounts consumed. It is not possible to quantify these reports into markers that could be used to approximate amounts of plant material or active ingredients consumed. However, despite the reported long duration and high levels of daily kratom consumption, during documented kratom discontinuation lasting from 10 to 20 h, no participant reported or displayed discomfort, symptoms, or signs of potential withdrawal symptoms."

100 long term kratom users and 100 non-users in Malaysia were interviewed to assess potential symptoms related to kratom dependence and withdrawal (Leong Bin Abdullah et al., 2021). Kratom use longer than 6 years and 3 or more times per day were more likely to be associated with dependence, reduced quality of life and/or withdrawal symptoms when kratom use is discontinued. However, the authors noted that the study did not allow causative conclusions as to whether quality of life reductions are a result of increased kratom use or if such quality of life and other demographic factors contribute to more frequent kratom use.

An internet survey assessing reasons for use and effects of use in 2,798 present and past kratom users included questions about kratom dependence, withdrawal symptoms associated with discontinuation, and use to self-manage opioid dependence (Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020). Kratom-related withdrawal symptoms were reported by 9.5% of respondents with another 17.5% reporting possible kratom-related withdrawal. This supports results of previous studies (Swogger et al., 2015; Grundmann, 2017; Smith and Lawson, 2017; Coe et al., 2019) by suggesting that kratom has a relatively benign risk profile compared to typical opioids, with only a minority of respondents endorsing kratom-related adverse effects, withdrawal symptoms, or problematic use.

Coe et al. (2019) conducted an internet survey (2,867 current, 157 former kratom users) that included similar questions as Garcia-Romeu et al. and Grundmann (2017) (Grundmann, 2017; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020), related to opioid use and effects. Kratom use was less likely to interfere with social, family, and occupational functioning compared to conventional opioids. Kratom was used by many to reduce or completely replace prescription and nonprescription opioid withdrawal and was generally considered "very effective" for managing opioid withdrawal. Relief of anxiety (including associated with post-traumatic stress disorder), depression, as well as to increase focus or energy were other major reasons for use. The foregoing conclusions are also consistent with those of Grundmann, Babin, Henningfield et al. (2021) who stated: "Some user reports suggest that regular kratom consumption carries risks of dependency and addiction, though with generally self-manageable withdrawal" (Grundmann et al., 2021).

Singh, Narayanan, Muller et al. (2018) employed widely used psychiatric instruments (Beck Depression Inventory and Beck Anxiety Inventory) to assess potential symptoms of anxiety and depression that may accompany abrupt discontinuation of kratom use in apparently frequent chronic kratom consumers in Malaysia (Singh et al., 2018c). Most respondents (70%) experienced symptoms of mild anxiety, while 81% reported symptoms of mild depression during kratom cessation. Those who consumed higher quantities of kratom tea daily (≥4 glasses) had "higher odds of reporting longer duration of kratom use history . . . , higher frequency of daily kratom use (≥4 times), . . . and were more likely to experience moderate symptoms of depression during kratom cessation" than those who consumed less. Cessation from regular and long-term kratom tea consumption was not associated with symptoms of high anxiety or depression.

3.5.3 Factor 7 Updated Conclusion

Kratom's potential to produce psychic dependence (aka "dependence" or "use disorder") and physiological dependence (aka, "withdrawal") advanced considerably due to surveys, and preclinical and clinical studies. Several surveys in the US, field studies in Malaysia, and a clinical trial of pain relief efficacy that included assessment of withdrawal support the conclusions of the 2018 8-FA (Henningfield et al., 2018a). Some kratom users report dependence/addiction and/or withdrawal with a greater likelihood with higher levels of chronic daily consumption. In general, it is more readily self-managed and less likely to interfere with occupational, social and family activities and responsibilities compared to dependencies to opioids, alcohol, stimulants and other drugs of abuse.

It is also important to note that there is wide individual variability, and some people do experience what they consider to be strong addiction and withdrawal to kratom. At present, it appears likely that many if not most individuals had prior histories of dependence to opioids and/or other drugs. Their conditions remain of concern nonetheless and is another area warranting further study. People for whom kratom use is considered a serious problem should have the same access to treatment as anyone with a substance use disorder. Many addiction treatment providers already advertise and offer kratom use disorder treatment assistance.

Use of opioids such as methadone and buprenorphine should be judicious in people seeking help to manage their kratom use disorder and/or withdrawal. If they formerly or are perhaps still using opioids, then the possibility of treatment with buprenorphine or methadone may be more helpful and appropriate if kratom is not satisfactory. However, for people without prior histories of recreational opioid use and dependence, treating with buprenorphine or methadone may introduce individuals to opioids and may not be the best option. This could be like treating unwanted caffeine dependence with amphetamine to replace the caffeine.

4 DISCUSSION AND CONCLUSION

In 2018, there was sufficient evidence to conclude that there was no imminent public health threat nor high degree of pharmacological abuse potential that would justify scheduling, taking into consideration the serious foreseeable adverse public health consequences of thousands of former opioid users returning to opioids and risking overdose, as well as the de facto criminalization of millions of US citizens. Approximately 8 months after the Henningfield et al. 8-FA was published, the US DHHS came to the same conclusion and rescinded the 2017 recommendation to place MG and 7-OH-MG in Schedule I of the CSA (Giroir, 2018). Since January 2018, there was remarkable research relevant to the abuse potential and safety of kratom from the perspective of the CSA eight factors.

Two intravenous drug self-administration studies showed that MG did not substitute for morphine (Hemby et al., 2019) or heroin (Yue et al., 2018), and that MG pretreatment reduced morphine and heroin self-administration. An intracranial brain self-stimulation (ICSS) study showed that whereas morphine produced robust decreases in the brain stimulation threshold, MG and 7-OH-MG did not (Behnood-Rod et al., 2020).

In the evaluation of physical dependence and withdrawal potential, four studies showed MG did not carry morphine-like physical dependence or withdrawal potential (Harun et al., 2020; Hassan et al., 2020; Wilson et al., 2020; Johari et al., 2021). Moreover, MG pretreatment of animals reduced spontaneous morphine withdrawal (Hassan et al., 2020). In MG physically dependent animals, withdrawal signs were qualitatively different and much weaker than morphine, consistent with its mixed mechanisms of action (Johari et al., 2021). In a mouse physical dependence model (Wilson et al., 2020), naloxone precipitated withdrawal in morphine- but not MG LKT-maintained animals, while LKT pretreatment significantly reduced withdrawal in the morphine-maintained mice.

These findings are consistent with new US survey data showing relatively low self-reported kratom addiction rates, with most people describing MG use to manage pain, depression, anxiety, opioid and other drug use disorders and withdrawal, and to increase alertness, focus and work performance. In addition, kratom dependence and withdrawal are generally weaker and more readily self-managed relative to opioids.

Extensive in vitro and in vivo animal neuropharmacology studies of the mechanisms of action of MG, 7-OH-MG and other alkaloids illustrate that they are not appropriately designated as opioids, opioid analogs, or "atypical opioids," though some are partial agonists with low potential to recruit beta arrestin and produce respiratory depression. 7-OH-MG produces stronger MOR mediated opioid effects on abuse potential related measures and antinociception, but naturally occurs at levels so low as to not contribute meaningfully to kratom effects. This supports recommendations that regulations should prohibit kratom products with 7-OH-MG concentrations greater than occur safely in nature.[5]

Safety assessments in pharmacokinetic and pharmacodynamic studies confirm that kratom based extracts and individual alkaloids at far higher doses than consumed by humans do not appear to carry substantial mortality risk, with one analysis suggesting a mortality risk at least 1000 times less than illicit opioids (Henningfield et al., 2019). Results support the US DHHS conclusion that "experts disagree on whether kratom by itself causes overdose deaths" (Giroir, 2018; National Institute on Drug Abuse, 2019). This does not imply that kratom does not carry a mortality risk—most substances do under certain conditions and exposure levels, another important area for further research.

As to the question of whether or not kratom poses an imminent public health threat, no analysis of factors 4–6 of the 8 CSA factors, including the FDA analysis (Food and Drug Administration, 2017b), revealed kratom to pose an imminent public health risk. The US has the most comprehensive survey data to address the need for temporary or "emergency" placement of substances into CSA Schedule I. Yet none of the major surveillance systems identified such a public health threat. This includes the old and new Drug Abuse Warning Network, Monitoring the Future, National Survey on Drug Use and Health, RADARS®, or the Treatment Evaluation Data Set. DEA's National Forensic Laboratory Information System mentioned kratom reports from 2010–2016 but none thereafter because the signal remained low. Neither has kratom been included in any DEA Annual National Drug Threat Reports.

The primary public health consequences of kratom use are well documented by four surveys of more than 20,000 kratom consumers summarized in this review, by Henningfield et al., 2018 (Henningfield et al., 2018a), and more than 20,000 comments to DEA (Drug Enforcement Adm, 2016) suggesting that millions of US citizens use kratom for health and well-being and many to self-manage opioid and other drug withdrawal and use disorders as their preferred approach. Many kratom users believe kratom is more effective, tolerable and/or accessible than other pharmaceuticals (Grundmann et al., 2018; Swogger and Walsh, 2018; Prozialeck et al., 2019; Prozialeck et al., 2020).

There are problems with kratom product purity (e.g., Prozialeck et al., 2020) (Prozialeck et al., 2020) and adulteration (Prozialeck et al., 2019) in the consumer marketplace. A scheduling imposed kratom ban would likely worsen these problems because kratom marketing would not discontinue and consumer demand would not cease, rather marketing would switch from regulatable lawful to illicit kratom suppliers. More states and ideally the US federal government could address these issues by product performance standards and regulatory approaches guided by science and informed through a federal rule-making approach.

Remarkably, as discussed in several reports (Henningfield et al., 2019; Prozialeck et al., 2019; Henningfield et al., 2021), there has yet to emerge a generally accepted estimate of the number of current US kratom consumers, which current ranges from approximately 2 to more than 10 million (see factors 4–6 and Henningfield et al., 2021) (Henningfield et al., 2021). As noted by Henningfield et al., 2018 and bluntly stated in the US DHHS scheduling rescission letter (Giroir, 2018), surveys need to address such issues before any action to ban consumer kratom sales and possession is contemplated. As stated in the DHHS letter:

"Further analysis and public input regarding kratom and its chemical components are needed before any scheduling should be undertaken. It is important that we have additional information to justify scheduling, such as:

- A scientific assessment of how many Americans utilize kratom, and an understanding of the geographic and demographic distribution of these users (Factors 4, 5);
- A scientific assessment of the actual scale and degree of dependence and/or addiction of Americans utilizing kratom (Factors 1, 5, 7);
- A scientific determination based on data whether kratom actually serves as a gateway drug that promotes further use of more dangerous opioids (Factors 1, 4, 5).
- A valid prediction of how many kratom users will suffer adverse consequences if kratom is no longer available, including among people with intractable pain, psychological distress, risk for suicide; and/or people who might transition to proven deadly opioids such as prescription opioids, heroin, or fentanyl.

[5]Five states (AZ, GA, NV, OK, and UT) have taken this approach in their kratom consumer protection regulations and law but setting actual performance standards to address the variety of kratom based products would be seem best done by FDA which has extensive experience in such matters and could take a federal rule making approach that ensures input from diverse stakeholders representing science, public health, consumers, and the industry that prepares and manufactures kratom products.

- A scientifically valid assessment of causality in the current few deaths in which kratom was co-utilized with known lethal drugs such as fentanyl (Factors 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6)" (Giroir, 2018).

By law, scheduling considers diverse evidence including chemistry and pharmacology, level of abuse potential, physiological dependence determined in animal and human studies, as well as assessment of individual and public health risks and benefits. Taking all of these factors into account, this review provides stronger evidence than was available to Henningfield et al., or the US DHHS in 2018 (Henningfield et al., 2018a; Giroir, 2018) to recommend not only that CSA scheduling is not warranted but that CSA scheduling carries a substantial foreseeable risk of thousands of opioid overdose deaths as well as depriving millions of US citizens of one of their preferred health management assets. The fact that possession of kratom by millions of US citizens would be criminalized as a heroin-like drug felony offense is not a CSA consideration but should not be ignored.

In conclusion, we do not recommend scheduling kratom or any of its alkaloids in the CSA. We do recommend accelerated research to address the many questions raised in this review, including support of the potential development of new medicines with potential better safety and/or efficacy profiles for a variety of diseases. Finally, we recommend that the US federal government and other nations consider approaches to kratom regulation as are presently being pioneered in five US states.

ABSTRACT

Kratom, derived from the plant Mitragyna speciosa, is receiving increased attention as an alternative to traditional opiates and as a replacement therapy for opiate dependence. Mitragynine (MG) and 7-hydroxymitragynine (7-HMG) are major psychoactive constituents of kratom. While MG and 7-HMG share behavioral and analgesic properties with morphine, their reinforcing effects have not been examined to date. 7-HMG, but not MG, substituted for morphine self-administration in a dose-dependent manner in the rat self-administration paradigm. Following the substitution procedure, re-assessment of morphine self-administration revealed a significant increase following 7-HMG and a significant decrease following MG substitution. In a separate cohort, 7-HMG, but not MG, engendered and maintained intravenous self-administration in a dose-dependent manner. The effects of pretreatment with nalxonaxine (NLXZ), a μ1 opiate receptor antagonist, and naltrindole (NTI), a δ opiate receptor antagonist, on 7-HMG and morphine self-administration were also examined. Both NLXZ and NTI reduced 7-HMG self-administration, whereas only NLXZ decreased morphine intake. The present results are the first to demonstrate that 7-HMG is readily self-administered, and the reinforcing effects of 7-HMG are mediated in part by μ and δ opiate receptors. In addition, prior exposure to 7-HMG increased subsequent morphine intake whereas prior exposure to MG decreased morphine intake. The present findings indicate that MG does not have abuse potential and reduces morphine intake, desired characteristics of candidate pharmacotherapies for opiate addiction and withdrawal, whereas 7-HMG should be considered a kratom constituent with high abuse potential that may also increase the intake of other opiates.

Keywords 7-hydroxymitragynine, addiction, mitragynine, opiate, reinforcement, self-administration.

INTRODUCTION

The increasing use of kratom (Mitragyna speciosa korth; aka thang, kakuam, thom, ketum, biak biak), a plant indigenous to Southeast Asia, has emerged as a public health concern in the US. Kratom has been used traditionally to combat fatigue and increase work productivity amongst farm populations in Southeast Asia. Kratom leaves are chewed or made into an extract and brewed (Hassan et al. 2013; Warner, Kaufman, & Grundmann 2016), and consumption is reported to produce stimulation (at low doses) and opiate-like effects (at higher doses) including analgesia, antitussive, antidiarrheal, and anti-inflammatory effects. Historically, kratom has also been used to reduce the intensity and duration of opiate withdrawal symptoms (Boyer et al. 2008; Ward et al. 2011; Cinosi et al. 2015; Warner et al. 2016); however, studies assessing the clinical efficacy of kratom are limited. In Southeast Asia, regular kratom use has been associated with physical dependence and withdrawal symptoms (Suwanlert 1975; Saingam et al. 2013; Singh, Muller, & Vicknasingam 2014), effects attributed in large part to mitragynine (MG). In the United States, there is growing concern regarding the safe use of kratom based on reports of addiction (Sheleg & Collins 2011; Galbis-Reig 2016) and toxicity and fatalities associated with use

Various strains of kratom are widely available over the internet as well as in various locations throughout the country. Forecasting models indicate kratom use will continue to increase in the United States (Stogner 2015). Currently, kratom consumption remains legal in the majority of states in the US. FDA's associate commissioner for regulatory affairs has stated that the FDA has 'identified Kratom as a botanical substance that poses a risk to public health and has the potential for abuse' (Food and Drug Administration, 2016). Concerns about Kratom have led the FDA to issue an import alert and public health advisory and the DEA to include kratom on the list of Drugs and Chemicals of Concern.

Kratom leaves contain more than 25 identified alkaloids (Hassan et al. 2013). Mitragynine (MG) and 7-hydroxymitrgynine (7-HMG), the main psychoactive alkaloids of kratom, constitute approximately 60 and 2 percent of the plant's alkaloids, respectively (Prozialeck, Jivan, & Andurkar 2012). MG and 7-HMG are partial agonists at the μ opiate receptor and weak antagonists at δ and κ opiate receptors (Kruegel et al. 2016; Varadi et al. 2016), with 7-HMG exhibiting approximately 5-fold greater affinity at the μ opiate receptor compared to MG. Assays of opiate receptor-mediated G-protein function reveal similar potencies for MG and 7-HMG (Kruegel et al. 2016; Varadi et al. 2016). While both compounds exhibit naloxone-sensitive antinociceptive activity, 7-HMG exhibits 40-fold greater potency than MG and 10-fold greater potency than morphine in these assays (Takayama et al. 2002; Matsumoto et al. 2004). Repeated administration of 7-HMG produces tolerance to the compound's analgesic effects as well as cross-tolerance to morphine's antinociceptive action (Matsumoto et al. 2005). Chronic consumption of kratom as well as repeated administration of 7-HMG induces physical dependence as determined by naloxone-precipitated withdrawal (Matsumoto et al. 2005).

Few studies have examined the abuse/addiction potential of MG and 7-HMG. The absence of controlled studies in humans creates space for basic science studies to provide critical information to help guide use and policy decisions. The abuse liability of compounds is generally assessed in animal models using drug discrimination, place conditioning and/or self-administration paradigms —all of which address different aspects of abuse. Studies in animal models have provided considerable insight into the behavioral effects of MG and 7-HMG as well as the potential neurobiological mechanisms underlying those effects. Acute administration of MG increases locomotor activity, induces anxiolytic effects and induces conditioned place preference (Yusoff et al. 2016), while repeated MG administration induces locomotor sensitization but impairs performance on a variety of cognitive tasks (Yusoff et al. 2016; Ismail et al. 2017). Moreover, MG and 7-HMG fully generalize to the discriminative stimulus effects of morphine, suggesting the potential for abuse (Harun et al., 2015).

The reinforcing effects of drugs are an important indicator of abuse liability which is typically evaluated using drug self-administration procedures. Inherent in the operational definition of reinforcement is the contingency between behavior and drug administration, an important differentiation between self-administration and place conditioning and drug discrimination. Drug self-administration is widely accepted as the gold standard of measurements for abuse liability (Katz 1989; Hemby 1999; Lynch & Hemby 2011). In spite of the concern of the potential abuse liability of MG and 7-HMG in humans, no published studies to date have examined the ability of these compounds to maintain self-administration in experimental subjects. To that end, we assessed that ability of MG and 7- HMG to substitute for morphine self-administration and to engender and maintain self-administration in drug naïve animals. Additionally, the contribution of μ and δ opiate receptors on the reinforcing effects of 7-HMG was examined. Results of these studies provide an objective assessment of the abuse potential of MG and 7-HMG in a rodent model that recapitulates key features of human drug taking.

MATERIALS AND METHODS

Subjects

Male Fischer 344 rats (100–130 days; Charles River, Wilmington, MA) were housed in a temperature-controlled vivarium on a 12-hour reversed light/dark cycle (lights on at 6:00 PM). Rats were group-housed two per cage with water available ad libitum. Food was restricted such that rats were maintained at 90 percent of their free feeding weight throughout the experiment. Experimental sessions were conducted during the dark phase of the light/dark cycle. All procedures were performed in accordance with the High Point University Institutional Animal Care and Use Committee and the National Institutes of Health Guide for the Care and Use of Laboratory Animals (NIH Publication No. 80-23) revised in 1996.

Chemicals

Mitragynine was isolated according to published procedures (Ponglux et al. 1994). 7-HMG was synthesized from mitragynine by McCurdy's research group, Department of BioMolecular Sciences, University of Mississippi, as previously published (Ponglux et al. 1994; Takayama et al. 2002). Mitragynine and 7-HMG were analyzed by ^{1}H NMR, ^{13}C NMR, elemental analysis, HPLC and HR-MS, and were found to be >99 percent pure. Morphine SO_4 was purchased from Gallipot, Inc. (St. Paul, MN), penicillin G procaine from Butler Company (Columbus, OH), propofol, ketamine HCl (Ketaset), xylazine (Xylamed) from Patterson Veterinary Supply, Inc. (Greely, CO), naltrindole and naloxonazine from Tocris Bioscience/Biotechne (Minneapolis, MN). Drugs were dissolved in heparinized saline. Morphine, MG and 7-HMG were infused in a volume of 200 µl.

Behavioral apparatus and training

Operant apparatus

Experiments were conducted in operant conditioning chambers (ENV-008CT; Med Associates, St. Albans, VT) enclosed in sound-attenuating cubicles (ENV-018; Med Associates). The front panel of the operant chambers contained a response lever (4 cm above the floor and 3 cm from the side wall), a cue light (3 cm above the lever) and a food chute centered on the front wall (2 cm above the floor) that was connected to a food pellet dispenser (ENV-023; Med Associates) located behind the front wall and a tone generator to mask extraneous noise. A syringe pump (PHM-100; Med Associates) holding a 20-ml syringe delivered infusions. A counterbalanced arm containing the single channel liquid swivel was located 8–8.5 cm above the chamber and attached to the outside of the front panel. An IBM compatible computer was used for session programming and data collection (Med Associates Inc., East Fairfield, VT).

Lever training

Subjects were transferred to the operant chambers for daily experimental sessions, and responding was engendered and maintained by delivery of food pellets (45-mg pellets; Noyes, Lancaster, NH) under an FR 1 schedule of reinforcement that was gradually increased to FR3 (every third response produced a food pellet). The lever light was illuminated when the schedule was in effect. Completion of the response requirement extinguished lights, delivered food and was followed by a 20-second timeout (TO) period during which all lights were extinguished, and responses had no scheduled consequences. After the TO, the lights were illuminated, and the FR schedule was again in effect. Sessions lasted 20 minutes or until 30 food pellets were delivered. Responding was considered stable when there was less than 10 percent variation in the number of reinforcers for three consecutive sessions.

Intravenous jugular surgery

After operant responding was acquired and maintained by food, subjects surgically implanted with an intravenous jugular catheter. Venous catheters were inserted into the right jugular vein following administration of ketamine (90 mg/kg; IP) and xylazine (5 mg/kg; IP) for anesthesia as described previously (Pattison et al. 2012; Pattison et al. 2014; McIntosh et al. 2015). Catheters were anchored to muscle near the point of entry into the vein. The distal end of the catheter was guided subcutaneously to exit above the scapulae through a Teflon shoulder harness. The harness provided a point of attachment for a spring leash connected to a single-channel fluid swivel at the opposing end. The catheter was threaded through the leash and attached to the swivel. The other end of the swivel was connected to a syringe (for saline and drug delivery) mounted on a syringe pump. Rats were administered penicillin G procaine (75 000 units in 0.25 ml, i.m.) and allowed a minimum of 5 days to recover before self-administration studies were initiated. Hourly infusions of heparinized saline were administered through the catheter to maintain functional catheters. The health of the rats was monitored daily by the experimenters and weekly by institutional veterinarians per the guidelines issued by the Institutional Animal Care and Use Committee and the National Institutes of Health. Infusions of propofol (6 mg/kg; i.v.) were manually administered as needed to assess catheter patency.

Rats were transferred to the operant chambers for daily two-hour self-administration sessions. Before each session, the swivel and catheter were flushed with 500 µl of heparinized saline before connecting the catheter to the syringe via a 20 ga luer hub and 28 ga male connector. The start of each session was indicated by the illumination of the house light, stimulus light above the lever and the extension of the lever. Completion of the response requirement was followed by a 20-second time out (FR3:TO 20 seconds) during which time the subject received a 200-µl intravenous infusion over the first 6 seconds, retraction of the lever, extinguishing of lever light, generation of a tone and illumination of the house light. At the end of the TO, the lever was extended, lever light illuminated, tone silenced and the house light extinguished (Hemby, Smith, & Dworkin 1996; Hemby et al. 1999; McIntosh et al. 2015).

Experiment 1: Substitution for morphine self-administration

Self-administration was engendered using 100 µg/inf of morphine sulfate. When responding was stable (two consecutive sessions in which the number of reinforcers did not vary by more than 20 percent), the dose was changed to 50 µg/inf. Following stable responding at this dose, saline was substituted for morphine until responding stabilized. Following the conclusion of extinction testing, rats were assigned to one of two groups to receive MG (n = 9; 25, 50, 100 and 150 μg/inf) or 7-HMG (n = 8; 2.5, 5, 10 and 20 μg/inf)—doses were randomized. The dose range for MG self-administration was based on the finding that equivalent doses of morphine and MG induced place conditioning in rats (Yusoff et al. 2016). The dose range for 7-HMG was based on the finding that 7-HMG substitutes for morphine in the drug discrimination procedure at a dose five-fold lower than the training dose of morphine. Once responding stabilized for a particular dose, the next dose was made available the following session until all doses mentioned above were assessed. After all doses had been assessed for a subject within a group, the rat was allowed to self-administer morphine (50 and 100 μg/inf) to determine the effect of prior drug history on subsequent morphine intake.

Experiment 2: Acquisition of self-administration

Whereas substitution procedures may be more sensitive for determining the reinforcing effects of a compound, acquisition procedures assess only the reinforcing effects of a single compound, without the potential confound of prior drug associations. The ability of MG and 7-HMG to engender and maintain responding without prior drug history was determined in a separate cohort of rats. Rats were assigned to one of three groups to self-administer MG (n = 8; 100 μg/infusion), 7-HMG (n = 8; 10 μg/infusion) or morphine (n = 6; 100 μg/infusion). Following stable responding at the initial dose, rats in the MG group were given access to 25 and 50 μg/infusion MG, 7-HMG group was allowed to self-administer 5.0 and 2.5 μg/infusion 7-HMG, while rats in the morphine group were allowed to self-administer 50 μg/infusion morphine. The presentation of doses for MG and 7-HMG was randomized following the initial dose.

Experiment 3: Selective opiate receptor antagonism of morphine and 7-HMG self-administration

To determine the contribution of μ and δ opiate receptors on the reinforcing effects of 7-HMG, rats that had previously acquired morphine and 7-MHG self-administration were administered naloxonazine (NLXZ), a selective μ1 receptor antagonist or the δ receptor antagonist naltrindole (NTI). NLXZ (5 and 15 mg/kg, i.p.) and NTI (0.5 and 5 mg/kg, i.p.) were administered 30 minutes before the session. The effects of saline pretreatment and saline extinction on responding were also assessed.

Experiment 1

Morphine self-administration as well as MG and 7-HMG substitution was analyzed using a one-factor ANOVA (Dose). Morphine self-administration before and after MG and 7-HMG substitution was analyzed using a two-way ANOVA (Dose × Pre/Post). Analysis of three days following MG and 7-HMG substitution was conducted using a two-way repeated measures ANOVA (Dose × Pre/Post) with Sessions as the repeated measure. Experiment 2. Acquisition of self-administration was analyzed using one-factor ANOVA (Dose) ANOVA and number of infusions as the dependent measure. Experiment 3. Comparisons between baseline intake and intake following saline pretreatment were conducted using two-tailed paired t-test for both the morphine and 7-HMG groups. The effects of NLXZ and NTI on morphine and 7-HMG were analyzed independently using a one-factor ANOVA (Antagonist Dose). Analysis of the session in which the antagonists or saline were administered, and the following session was conducted using a two-way repeated measures ANOVA (Dose × Day) with Sessions as the repeated measure. The number of infusions was the dependent variable for analyses. Where appropriate, post hoc analyses were conducted using Tukey's test.

RESULTS

Substitution and reintroduction of morphine

Responding was engendered and maintained by morphine at the doses tested [$F(2,17) = 24.4$, $P < 0.0001$]. Morphine self-administration was dose-dependent with both morphine doses significantly greater than saline and 50 μg greater than 100 μg/infusion ($P < 0.05$) (Fig. 1a). MG was not reliably self-administered when substituted for morphine [$F(4,38) = 0.51$, $P = 0.73$]. MG intake was not significantly different from vehicle, suggesting that MG does not function as a reinforcer at the doses tested (Fig. 1b). In contrast, 7-HMG substituted for morphine with intake dependent on the dose available [$F(4,32) = 6.3$, $P = 0.0009$]. The number of infusions obtained for 5 and 10 μg/inf were significantly greater than vehicle ($P < 0.05$), confirming that these doses of 7-HMG functioned as reinforcing stimuli. 7-HMG resulted in an inverted 'U'-shaped dose-effect function with maximal intake observed at 5 and 10 μg/inf (Fig. 1c).

Following completion of the substitution protocol, morphine self-administration was re-assessed. Morphine intake was significantly altered by both MG [$F(1,32) = 5.5$, $P = 0.025$] and 7-HMG [$F(1,24) = 12.92$, $P = 0.0015$], albeit in opposite directions. MG exposure significantly reduced morphine self-administration of 50 μg ($P < 0.01$), but not 100 μg [Fig. 1d (top panel)]. The decrease in morphine self-administration (50 μg) was not observed on the first day following MG exposure but was significantly decreased on days two and three Fig. 1c (middle panel)].

(a) Morphine was reliably self-administered in a dose-dependent manner ($P < 0.001$ saline versus 50 μg/inf and 50 versus 100 μg/inf, $P < 0.01$ saline versus 100 μg/inf). (b) MG did not substitute for morphine (100 μg/inf) at any of the doses tested. (c) 7-HMG substituted for morphine (100 μg/inf) in a dose-dependent manner (*$P < 0.05$ saline versus 5 μg/inf, 10 versus 20 μg/inf, $P < 0.01$ saline versus 10 μg/inf). (d, e) Comparisons were made between morphine self-administration pre-exposure and post-exposure to MG ($n = 9$), and 7-HMG ($n = 7$) substitution. (d) Top panel: Comparison of morphine intake pre-MG exposure versus post-MG exposure revealed a significant difference in self-administration ($P < 0.01$, pre-MG exposure versus post-MG exposure for 50 μg/inf). (d) Middle panel: Assessment of morphine self-administration for 3 days following MG exposure revealed a decrease in intake of 50 μg/inf morphine compared to pre-MG exposure levels ($P < 0.01$ sessions 2 and 3 pre-exposure versus post-exposure to MG). (d) Bottom panel but had no change in morphine self-administration of 100 μg/inf across the 3 days. (e) Top panel, Comparison of morphine intake pre-7-HMG exposure versus post-7-HMG exposure revealed a significant difference in self-administration ($P < 0.01$, pre-7-HMG exposure versus post-7-HMG exposure for 50 μg/inf morphine). (e) Middle panel: Substitution of 7-HMG resulted in a significant increase in morphine self-administration (50 μg/inf) for the 3 days following 7-HMG exposure ($P < 0.01$ sessions 1 and 2, *$P < 0.05$ session 3 pre-exposure versus post-exposure to 7-HMG). (e) Bottom panel whereas self-administration of 100 μg/inf of morphine was not altered by 7-HMG exposure. Data are expressed as mean ± s.e.m.

Intake of 100-μg morphine did not differ from saline before or following exposure to MG [Fig. 1d (bottom panel)].

In contrast, 7-HMG administration significantly increased self-administration of 50-μg morphine ($P < 0.01$), and there was a trend towards increased intake of 100-μg morphine ($P = 0.054$) [Fig. 1e (top panel)]. Morphine self-administration (50 μg) was significantly elevated for the three days following 7-HMG exposure by 109, 110 and 95 percent, respectively

© 2018 Society for the Study of Addiction

[Fig. 1e (middle panel)]. Self-administration of 100-μg morphine was also increased for the 3 days following 7-HMG exposure by 53, 75 and 41 percent, respectively [Fig. 1e (bottom panel)]. We also determined whether morphine self-administration was altered by forced abstinence for an equivalent number of days to the substitution procedure. Morphine intake was not altered by the forced abstinence period [$F(1,20) = 8$, $P = 0.1523$], suggesting that the amount of time between morphine self-administration availability did not influence intake (data not shown).

Acquisition of self-administration

Following the assessment of the ability of MG and 7-HMG to substitute for morphine self-administration, we assessed the ability of MG and 7-HMG to engender and maintain responding in a separate cohort of rats. Morphine was readily self-administered at the doses tested [$F(2,17) = 24$, $P < 0.0001$]. Self-administration of 50 and 100 μg was greater than saline and the number of infusions obtained for the 50 μg/inf was significantly greater than 100 μg/inf (Fig. 2a). In contrast, access to MG did not reliably engender or maintain self-administration at any of the doses tested [$F(3,31) = 2.255$, $P = 0.1038$] as intake was not significantly different from vehicle, indicating that MG does not function as a reinforcer in this procedure at the doses tested (Fig. 2b). Similar to morphine, rats self-administered 2.5, 5 and 10 μg/infusion of 7-HMG [$F(3,31) = 6.2$, $P = 0.0024$]—the same doses that substituted for morphine self-administration (Fig. 2c). The number of infusions obtained 5 and 10 μg/inf was significantly greater than vehicle ($P < 0.05$), demonstrating that these doses served as reinforcing stimuli. Intake for 2.5 and 20 μg/inf 7-HMG did not significantly differ from vehicle. Comparison of saline intake for all groups revealed there was no statistically significant difference between the groups [$F(2,22) = 2.99$, $P = 0.0731$]. Tukey's post hoc test revealed there was no statistically significant difference between any of the group pairs.

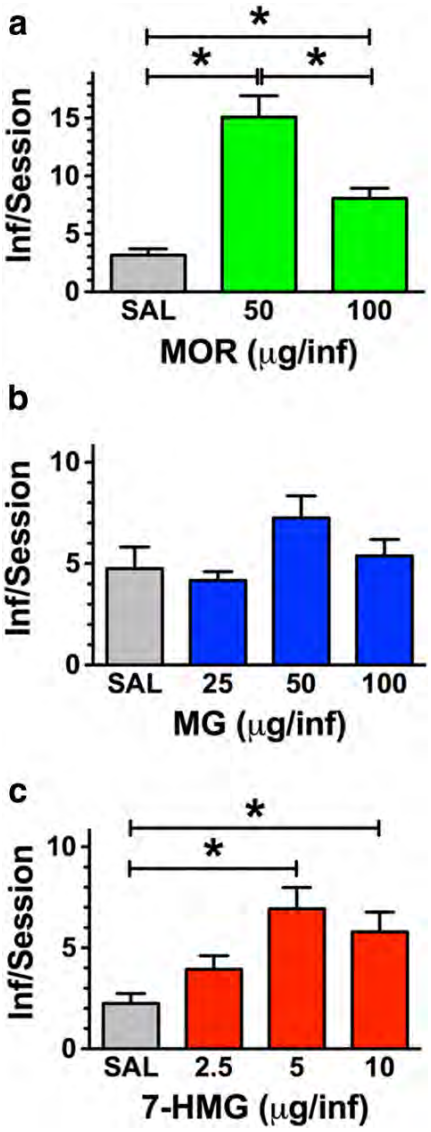

Figure 2 Acquisition of intravenous self-administration with 7-HMG but not MG. (a) Rats acquired morphine self-administration, and intake was dose dependent. (b) Rats did not acquire self-administration of MG at any of the doses tested. (c) However, a separate cohort of rats acquired self-administration of 7-HMG. $n = 8$ rats. Data are expressed as mean ± s.e.m. $^{*}P < 0.05$, $^{}P < 0.01$, $^{#}P < 0.0001$

Antagonist effects on 7-HMG and morphine self-administration

The effects of the selective μ opiate receptor antagonist NLXZ and the δ receptor antagonist NTI on morphine (50 μg/inf) and 7-HMG (5 μg/inf) self-administration were examined. The selection was based on doses that maintained the highest intake for morphine and 7-HMG self-administration, respectively. NLXZ pretreatment attenuated morphine self-administration [$F(2,15) = 76$, $P < 0.0001$] [Fig. 3a (left panel)]. Both 5 and 15 mg/kg NLXZ produced a significant decrease in the number of infusions for morphine ($P < 0.05$); however, there was no significant difference in the number of infusions between the doses. Morphine intake was significantly decreased the day of NLXZ pretreatment for both doses ($P < 0.001$) and returned to control levels the following session [Fig. 3a (right panel)]. Pretreatment with NLXZ also significantly reduced 7-HMG self-administration [$F(2,22) = 39$, $P < 0.0001$] [Fig. 3b (left panel)]. Both NLXZ doses significantly reduced 7-HMG

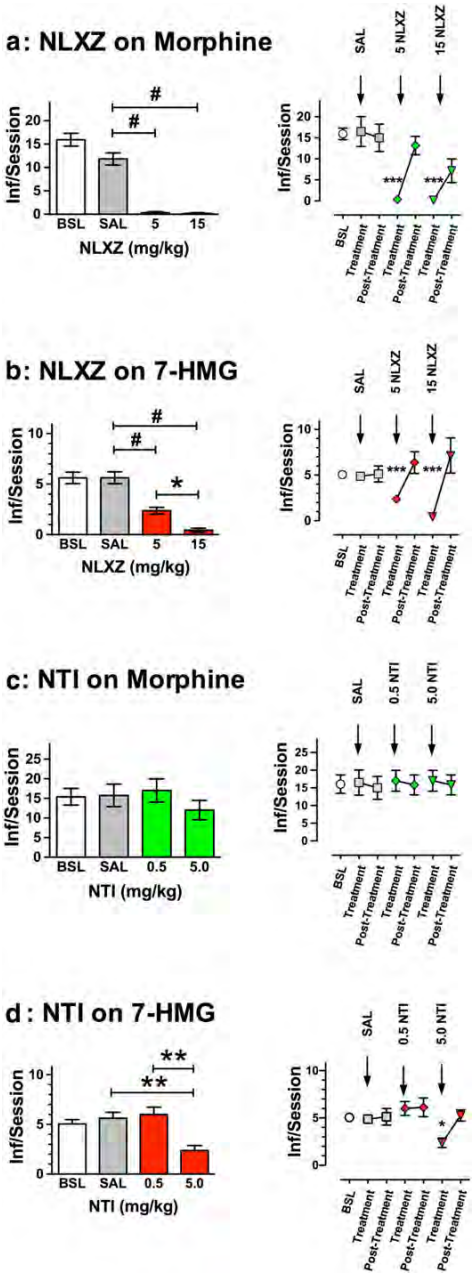

Figure 3 Selective μ and δ opiate receptor antagonist pretreatment alters 7-HMG self-administration. Effects of NLXZ on morphine (50 μg/inf) and 7-HMG (5 μg/inf) self-administration. Baseline drug intake was not significantly different than intake following saline pretreatment for morphine analysis or 7HMG analysis. (a) Left panel NLXZ significantly reduced the number of morphine infusions compared to saline pretreatment ($^{#}P < 0.0001$, saline versus 5 and 15 mg/kg NLXZ). (a) Right panel There was a significant interaction between NLXZ doses and sessions with infusions on the day of pretreatment significantly less than following saline pretreatment for the 15 mg/kg NLXZ dose ($^{}P < 0.001$). (b) Left panel NLXZ decreased 7-HMG self-administration, the effect was dose dependent ($^{#}P < 0.0001$, $^{*}P < 0.05$) and (b) right panel There was a significant interaction between NLXZ doses and sessions with infusions on day of pretreatment significantly less than following saline pretreatment for both NLXZ doses. We also examined the effects of NTI on morphine (50 μg/inf) and 7-HMG (5 μg/inf) self-administration. Baseline drug intake was not significantly different than intake following saline pretreatment for morphine analysis and 7HMG analysis. (c) Left panel NTI did not significantly alter morphine self-administration at either dose tested. (c) Right panel No significant interaction of NTI dose and session was observed. (d) Left panel Pretreatment with NTI decreased 7-HMG self-administration in a dose-dependent manner ($^{}P < 0.01$, saline versus 5.0 mg/kg NTI, 0.5 versus 5.0 mg/kg NTI) and (d) right panel There was a significant interaction between NTI doses and sessions although Bonferroni's post hoc analysis did not reveal any significant differences between saline and NTI pretreatment for either day. intake compared to saline ($P < 0.0001$), although intake following 15 mg/kg was significantly less than following 5 mg/kg ($P < 0.05$). For both doses, 7-HMG intake was significantly reduced the day of NLXZ pretreatment ($P < 0.001$) and returned to control levels the following session [Fig. 3b (right panel)]. Comparison of baseline intake was not significantly different than intake following saline pretreatment for the morphine [$t = 2.5$, df = 5, $P = 0.057$] or 7-HMG groups [$t = 0.03$, df = 7, $P = 0.98$]; therefore, the number of infusions following saline was used for comparison with NLXZ.

NTI pretreatment produced differential effects on morphine and 7-HMG self-administration. Neither 0.5 nor 5.0 mg/kg NTI significantly altered morphine self-administration [$F(2,17) = 0.88$, $P = 0.434$] [Fig. 3c (left panel)]. Morphine intake following either dose of NTI did not differ significantly from saline pretreatment the day of or the day following pretreatment [Fig. 3c (right panel)]. In contrast, 5.0 mg/kg NTI pretreatment significantly altered 7-HMG self-administration [$F(2,23) = 11$, $P < 0.0007$] [Fig. 3d (left panel)]. The effect of NTI on 7-HMG intake was dose dependent as intake following the 5 mg/kg dose was significantly lower than saline ($P < 0.05$) as well as the 0.5 g/kg dose ($P < 0.05$). 7-HMG intake was significantly reduced the day of 5.0 mg/kg NTI pretreatment ($P < 0.05$) and returned to control levels the following session [Fig. 3 (right panel)]. For naltrindole (NTI), comparison of baseline intake was not significantly different than intake following saline pretreatment for the morphine [$t = 0.13$, df = 5, $P = 0.90$] or 7-HMG groups [$t = 0.94$, df = 7, $P = 0.38$].

DISCUSSION

The present study provides the first characterization of the reinforcing effects of MG and 7-HMG in an animal model of human drug consumption. Using the intravenous self-administration procedure, the study demonstrates 7-HMG, but not MG, substitute for morphine self-administration and engender and maintain self-administration in drug-naïve rats. Under both the substitution and acquisition self-administration procedures, 7-HMG self-administration exhibited an inverted 'U' dose–effect curve, typical of other drugs of abuse under similar experimental conditions, wherein low to moderate doses increase responding and higher doses decrease responding (Wilson, Hitomi, & Schuster 1971; Pickens 1978). In both self-administration procedures, 7-HMG maintained intake above levels observed for saline, indicating the compound serves as a reinforcing stimulus within the range of the doses examined. Previous studies have shown MG induces a conditioned place preference (Sufka et al. 2014; Yusoff et al. 2016; Yusoff et al. 2017) and both MG and 7-HMG generalize to the discriminative stimulus effects of morphine (Harun et al. 2015). Both procedures provide valuable information about the abuse liability of compounds such as the motivational effects of contextual cues associated with a drug (place conditioning) and whether a compound shares subjective effects with a known drug of abuse (drug discrimination). Self-administration is used to examine the reinforcing effects of drugs, a key feature influencing the potential risk for abuse. With regard to opioids, findings from studies using rat self-administration models are highly consistent with clinical measures of abuse liability and have proven to be a reliable predictor of abuse liability in humans (O'Connor et al. 2011). While MG shares a similar mechanism of action with morphine, the present results demonstrate a difference in the reinforcing effects and thus the abuse potential between the two compounds. The discrepancy between the present finding and those of aforementioned place conditioning and drug discrimination studies are intriguing and warrant further assessment of routes of administration as well as non-human primate and human abuse potential studies. The self-administration of 7-HMG along with the shared subjective effects of morphine (Harun et al. 2015) indicate that 7-HMG has a significant potential to be abused. Additional studies are needed to examine the ability of 7-HMG self-administration to induce physical dependence and withdrawal, and the effects of 7-HMG on relapse to morphine, other opiates and other drug classes. The present findings along with the results of additional studies will provide critical information as to whether the compounds warrant control under the Controlled Substances Act.

In addition to abuse liability assessments, we also explored the impact of exposure to MG and 7-HMG to subsequent morphine intake following completion of the substitution procedure. Exposure to less than 2 mg of MG over a 2-week period (when examining the ability of MG to substitute for morphine) significantly reduced subsequent morphine self-administration up to 3 days following the last administration of MG. These findings raise the possibility that MG may contribute to the reported reduction in opiate intake in dependent individuals. Buprenorphine, a μ receptor partial agonist like MG, also reduced morphine (Harrigan & Downs 1981) as well as heroin self-administration (Mello, Bree, & Mendelson 1983) when administered continuously or intravenously twice daily but the effects on intake were acute. The effects of MG on morphine intake in the present study are intriguing but should be interpreted with caution for several reasons including the lack of morphine dose-dependent effects, the absence of a MG dose-effect determination on morphine and other commonly abused opiates, and the need to assess the effect of MG on animal models of opiate relapse and withdrawal. The finding that MG, in contrast to buprenorphine which has abuse liability (Jones et al., 2017), does not appear to have abuse liability and reduces morphine intake is intriguing and warrants further investigation to determine the efficacy of MG as a potential pharmacotherapy for opiate addiction. Comparison of MG with buprenorphine as well as methadone, on the self-administration of morphine as well as other opiates, is needed to determine the therapeutic potential and potency of MG. The effects of 7-HMG on morphine intake are opposite to those observed with MG. An average total intake of approximately 700 μg of 7-HMG over a 2 to 3-week period (when examining substitution for morphine) induced a significant elevation in subsequent morphine self-administration over 3 days following the last exposure to the compound, indicative of tolerance to morphine. Previous reports indicate that kratom users develop tolerance, increasing intake over time (Suwanlert 1975; Hassan et al. 2013). While tolerance to the analgesic effects of 7-HMG has been reported (Matsumoto et al. 2005; Matsumoto et al. 2008), no published studies to date report tolerance or cross-tolerance to morphine (or other opiates) intake. The increase in morphine intake in the present study could reflect a compensatory response to withdrawal from 7-HMG; however, this is unlikely as no overt signs of withdrawal were observed. Additional studies are warranted to determine if the observed increase in morphine intake following 7-HMG self-administration is related to a change in the reinforcing effects of morphine, a decrease in the adverse effects or a combination of the two. The demonstration that 7-HMG has significant abuse potential and increases the intake of morphine and possibly other opiates has significant potential clinical relevance.

The present study utilized two variations of the intravenous self-administration procedure to determine abuse liability of MG and 7-HMG: substitution and acquisition of self-administration. The substitution procedure assessed the ability of MG and 7-HMG to substitute for morphine in rats with a history of morphine self-administration and provided a clinically relevant evaluation given the potential for cross-generalization of opiates, the use of kratom to reduce intake of and withdrawal from other opiates, and the use of kratom as an affordable substitute for heroin (Boyer, Babu, & Macalino 2007; Boyer et al. 2008; Vicknasingam et al. 2010). The ability of 7-HMG to substitute for morphine in the present study suggests that the reinforcing effects may be mediated by similar neural mechanisms such as μ and δ opiate receptors. The effects of NLXZ on 7-HMG and morphine self-administration may reflect nonspecific effects on responding; however, we do not consider this a viable interpretation inasmuch as NLXZ doses within this range do not affect responding maintained by saccharin or food (Liu & Jernigan 2011; Peana et al. 2011). The present results confirm and extend previous studies of the effects of NLXZ on opiates including decreasing heroin self-administration (Negus et al. 1993), decreasing morphine-induced place conditioning in rats (Piepponen et al. 1997) and attenuating the discriminative stimulus effects of morphine (Suzuki et al. 1995). These results indicate that the reinforcing effects of morphine 7-HMG are mediated in part by μ opiate receptors.

NTI, the selective δ opiate receptor antagonist, attenuated 7-HMG in a dose-dependent manner. The lack of effect of NTI on morphine self-administration is supported by previous studies, which indicates that NTI does not alter morphine place conditioning (Suzuki et al. 1994; Piepponen et al. 1997) or the discriminative stimulus effects of morphine (Stevenson et al. 2000). In contrast, NTI and naltrindole-5′-isothiocyanate have been shown to attenuate the reinforcing effects of heroin (Negus et al. 1993; Martin et al. 2000); however, δ opiate receptors are not considered to directly mediate heroin reinforcement. The reinforcing effects of heroin are mediated via μ opiate receptors which bind the major heroin metabolites, morphine and 6-monoacetylmorphine, neither of which bind to the δ receptor with appreciable affinity. The difference in the effects of NTI between the Negus et al. study is likely attributable to the finding that only the 10 and 17 mg/kg doses of NTI were effective in attenuating heroin self-administration—compared with 0.5 and 5 mg/kg in the present study. Given that the 5 mg/kg NTI dose slightly decreased morphine self-administration, higher doses of NTI may have significantly attenuated intake. The significant attenuation of the reinforcing effects of 7-HMG by NTI reflects involvement of δ opiate receptors in the reinforcing effects of this compound. Given that 7-HMG is a weak δ opiate receptor antagonist, the finding that antagonism of the δ receptor partially attenuates the reinforcing effects of this compound seems counterintuitive. However, two potential mechanisms may account in part for the finding. Martin et al. suggested that morphine-induced activation of μ opiate receptors in the pallidum stimulates release of met-enkephalin that then binds to δ opiate receptors to exert reinforcing effects (Martin et al. 2000). Because 7-HMG is a partial μ opiate receptor agonist, the compound may exert effects similar to morphine via this mechanism. An alternative hypothesis suggests that chronic μ opiate receptor stimulation results in δ opiate receptor recruitment and μ opiate receptor desensitization. However, the dose-dependent effect of NLXZ on 7-HMG indicates that μ receptors were not de-sensitized. The manner in which δ opiate receptors are involved in 7-HMG reinforcement remains to be determined. Nonetheless, results from the present study indicate that both μ and δ opiate receptors contribute to the reinforcing effects of 7-HMG. Current pharmacotherapies for opiate addiction including methadone, buprenorphine and naloxone do not bind appreciably to δ opiate receptors and therefore may be less effective in treating kratom abuse.

The current results are the first demonstration of self-administration of MG and 7-HMG in the preclinical literature; however, several issues related to study design and methodology deserve to be addressed. First, food was restricted for all subjects in the present study in order to enhance acquisition and maintenance of self-administration in both the substitution and acquisition procedures. Previous studies have demonstrated that food restriction facilitates the acquisition of opiate self-administration and increases intake during the maintenance phase as well as enhances drug seeking (Piazza & Le Moal 1998). The absence of MG acquisition or substitution under food restriction conditions provides confidence that administration of this alkaloid is not reinforcing even under conditions that enhance the probability of intake. Nonetheless, negative results in self-administration procedures are difficult to interpret and may be due to multiple experimental variables that are not optimal for the drug being investigated including, but not limited to, the schedule of reinforcement, response contingencies, selected doses, rate of infusion, route of administration and drug availability. For example, the lack of MG self-administration may be attributed in part to the route of administration. Kratom is administered orally by humans whereas intravenous administration was used in the present study—routes which would yield different rates of onset of drug effects, drug levels, duration of effect and metabolism. The concern is mitigated to some extent by the finding that 7-HMG, a structurally similar compound from the same plant, is readily self-administered intravenously using the same procedure. Thus, the relevance of the current findings using the intravenous self-administration is not diminished, although future studies need to address the abuse liability of MG and 7-HMG using voluntary oral consumption methods (food and liquid). Another caveat to the present experimental design is the use of one versus two levers in the self-administration procedure. The determination of reinforcement is based on the statistical comparison of intake maintained by doses of a drug versus a negative control, which is vehicle in the present study. Alternatively, comparisons can be made between the rates of responding on an 'active' versus the 'inactive' lever. In either case, drugs that engender and/or maintain responding at levels that exceed responding maintained by the negative control are considered to be self-administered (function as reinforcing stimuli) (O'Connor et al. 2011).

In summary, the present findings from the rodent self-administration model indicate that MG, the main kratom alkaloid, does not have abuse or addiction potential and reduces morphine intake—desired characteristics of candidate pharmacotherapies for opiate addiction and withdrawal. In contrast, 7-HMG should be considered a kratom constituent with high abuse potential that may also increase the intake of other opiates. Although 7-HMG constitutes only 2 percent of the alkaloid content of kratom, purified extracts of 7-HMG are widely available on the internet and are consumed for their euphoric effects. Additional danger is posed by adulteration or the presence of high concentrations of 7-HMG in commercially available kratom products (Lydecker et al. 2016) which may increase the abuse liability.

Abstract

Rationale Substantial use of the plant kratom for psychoactive effects has driven interest in its abuse liability. Several place conditioning studies suggest abuse liability of the active ingredient mitragynine, though studies of its self-administration have not been published.

Methods Binding of mitragynine to rat brain mu, kappa, and delta opioid receptors was compared to that for heroin and morphine. Self-administration of mitragynine, heroin, methamphetamine, or saline was assessed during single-session substitutions in rats trained to self-administer methamphetamine (0.022 mg/kg/injection, i.v.) during 1-h daily sessions.

Results Mitragynine had > 2- or ~ 16-fold greater affinity for the mu opioid receptor than, respectively, for kappa or delta opioid receptors. Its affinity for the mu receptor was ~ 200-fold less than that for morphine. In rats trained to self-administer methamphetamine, saline substitutions significantly decreased the number of responses, whereas different doses of methamphetamine (0.002–0.068 mg/kg/injection) or heroin (0.001–0.03 mg/kg/injection) maintained self-administration with maximal responding at 0.022 or 0.01 mg/kg/injection, respectively. In contrast, no dose of mitragynine maintained response rates greater than those obtained with saline. Presession mitragynine treatment (0.1 to 3.0 mg/kg) decreased response rates maintained by heroin but had little effect on responding maintained by methamphetamine across the same range of doses.

Conclusions These results suggest a limited abuse liability of mitragynine and potential for mitragynine treatment to specifically reduce opioid abuse. With the current prevalence of opioid abuse and misuse, it appears currently that mitragynine is deserving of more extensive exploration for its development or that of an analog as a medical treatment for opioid abuse.

Significant use of the plant kratom for its psychoactive effects has prompted interest by the United States Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) to temporarily place the active ingredients of the plant, mitragynine, and 7-hydroxymitragynine, into Schedule I of the Controlled Substances Act as an abusable substance (US Drug Enforcement Administration 2016). The notice of that intent by DEA was met with responses from the public, commercial, and legislative sectors which included testimonials though little scientific evidentiary support for those various responses (Henningfield et al. 2018).

Kratom is the commonly used term for the leaves of Mitragyna speciosa, which contain a variety of constituents. Mitragynine accounts for 66% of total alkaloid content in some geographical variants of the plant with variations among species studied and interactions among the various kratom constituents (Takayama 2004). 7-OH-Mitragynine is also present at lower levels with a 5- to 10-fold higher affinity for μ-opioid receptors (Kruegel et al. 2016). As levels in brain tissue after intravenous injection of mitragynine indicate suitable brain penetration from plasma (Kong et al. 2017), it is likely that mitragynine is the main pharmacologically active alkaloid in kratom (Kruegel and Grundmann 2018), though see the description below of a study of kratom extracts (Sufka et al. 2014).

(see Hassan et al. 2017; Kruegel and Grundmann 2018 for reviews). A study of place conditioning (Sufka et al. 2014) administered different doses of mitragynine or an extract of Mitragyna speciosa leaves over eight conditioning sessions, half of which were preceded with mitragynine injection and half with vehicle. Significant place conditioning was obtained in rats administered 5 or 30 mg/kg of mitragynine though the effect eluded statistical significance at 10 mg/kg. Though the kratom extract increased place conditioning, it was not to a statistically significant extent. The authors interpreted the diminished effect of the extract as possibly due to lower concentrations of mitragynine in the extract or the presence of other plant constituents with effects interfering with the effect of mitragynine. Yusoff et al. (2016), using a similar procedure, found significant place conditioning in rats administered 10 or 30 mg/kg of mitragynine over ten conditioning sessions. In a subsequent study (Yusoff et al. 2017), the place conditioning induced by 10 mg/kg of mitragynine was blocked by the co-administration of naloxone (0.3 or 1.0 mg/kg), indicating that the place conditioning was mediated by opioid receptors. However, there are studies suggesting non-opioid effects of mitragynine (Kruegel and Grundmann 2018), and a recent report of baclofen blockade of mitragynine-induced place conditioning suggests potential $GABA_B$ receptor involvement in that effect (Yusoff et al. 2018).

Harun et al. (2015) compared the discriminative stimulus effects of mitragynine (15 mg/kg, i.p.) to those of morphine (5.0 mg/kg) in separate groups of rats each trained with one of the compounds. Both groups acquired discriminative control, though the morphine group acquired that control more rapidly. Each training drug produced a dose-related generalization to the training dose and each drug dose-dependently substituted for the other. Further 7-OH-mitragynine substituted for morphine more potently than did mitragynine. Interestingly, the discriminative effects of mitragynine were only incompletely antagonized by naloxone (Harun et al. 2015).

In a recent report (Hemby et al. 2018), rats were trained to reliably self-administer morphine (50 or 100 μg/infusion) under a fixed-ratio 3-response schedule, followed by replacement of drug with saline and extinction of responding. Following extinction, rats were allowed to self-administer different doses of mitragynine or 7-OH-mitragynine. No dose of mitragynine (25 to 150 μg/injection) maintained rates of responding significantly greater than those maintained by saline. In contrast, 7-OH-mitragynine maintained rates above those for saline at 2.5 to 20 μg/injection and also did so in a separate group of subjects without experience self-administering morphine. Both the μ-opioid receptor selective antagonist naloxonazine and the δ-opioid receptor antagonist naltrindole decreased self-administration of 7-OH-mitragynine but only naloxonazine decreased morphine self-administration.

The present study was designed to further assess the abuse liability of mitragynine using a self-administration procedure in rats. To confirm opioid activity, the displacement by mitragynine of opioid radioligands was studied using native rat tissue and compared to that produced by the standard opioids, morphine, and heroin. These binding affinities helped select doses tested to ensure that biologically active doses of mitragynine were studied.

Methods

Receptor binding assays Whole rat brain tissue excluding the cerebellum was thawed on ice, then homogenized in 50 mM Tris HCl, pH 7.5 using a Brinkman Polytron (setting 6 for 20 s), and centrifuged at 30,000 × g for 10 min at 4 °C. The supernatant was discarded and the pellet was resuspended in fresh buffer and spun at 30,000×g for 10 min. The supernatant was discarded and the pellet was resuspended to give 100 mg/ml original wet weight. Ligand-binding experiments were conducted in polypropylene assay tubes containing 0.5 ml Tris HCl buffer for 60 min at room temperature. [^{3}H]DADLE (final concentration 1 nM, PolyPeptide Laboratories, San Diego, CA), [^{3}H]DAMGO (final concentration 1 nM, PolyPeptide Laboratories, San Diego, CA), or [^{3}H]U-69,593 (final concentration 1 nM, Perkin Elmer Life Sciences, Waltham, MA) were used to determine binding at the delta, mu, and kappa opioid receptor sites, respectively. Unlabeled DAMGO (final concentration, 30 nM) was added to the delta receptor assay tubes to block the binding of the radioligand to mu opioid receptors. All assay tubes contained 100 μl homogenate suspension. Non-specific binding was determined using 0.01 mM naloxone for all assays. Incubations were terminated by rapid filtration through Whatman GF/B filters, presoaked in 0.1% PEI (polyethyleneimine), using a Brandel R48 filtering manifold (Brandel Instruments, Gaithersburg, MA). The filters were washed twice with 5 ml cold buffer and transferred to scintillation vials. Cytoscint (MP BioMedicals, Santa Ana, CA) (3.0 ml) was added and the vials were counted the next day using a Perkin Elmer TriCarb liquid scintillation counter.

Data were analyzed by using GraphPad Prism software (San Diego, CA). Inhibition constants (K_i values) were calculated using the Cheng-Prusoff equation (Cheng and Prusoff 1973), with IC_{50} value of inhibitors used in the assay and the K_d value of the radioligand previously determined in this laboratory.

Subjects for behavioral experiments Six male Sprague-Dawley rats (obtained from the Animal Center of the Tongji Medical College of Hua Zhong University of Science & Technology, Wuhan, China) served as subjects and were acclimated to a temperature- and humidity-controlled room for at least 1 week before any procedures. Food and water were available at all times in their home cages. The housing room was under a 12:12-h light/dark cycle with lights on at 7:00 AM. After acclimation, body weights of subjects were maintained at approximately 320 g. The experimental protocol was approved by an Institutional Review Committee for the use of Animal Subjects. All procedures and facilities were operated in accordance with the Guide for the Care and Use of Laboratory Animals of Jianghan University.

After the 1-week acclimation to the facility, a chronic intravenous catheter (3.5 cm in length, 0.58 mm inner diameter, 0.91 mm outer diameter, BPU-T30, Instech, Plymouth Meeting, PA, USA) was surgically implanted in the subject and secured to the right jugular vein under sodium pentobarbital (50 mg/kg, i.p.) anesthesia, as per Kai et al. (2014). Catheters exited dorsally in the mid-scapular region through a back mount that was secured subcutaneously. Following surgery, rats were housed individually in home cages and allowed at least 7 days of recovery during which they received daily intravenous infusions of gentamicin (0.16 mg/kg) followed by 0.2 ml of a heparinized (1%) sterile saline solution to minimize the likelihood of infection and the formation of clots or fibroids.

Behavioral procedures All self-administration experiments were conducted in operant-conditioning chambers (29 × 26 × 29 cm) enclosed in sound-attenuating and light-proof cubicles which were equipped with fans that provided ventilation (Anilab Software & Instruments Co., Ltd., China) (Zhang 2006). Two nose-poke operanda (ENV-114M; Med Associates, Fairfax, VT) were located 9 cm above the floor on the front panels of the chambers. A red stimulus light was mounted within each nose-poke hole and a white house light was mounted near the ceiling on the opposite wall. A syringe driver (model 22; Harvard Apparatus, Holliston, MA) containing a 10-ml syringe delivered injections. The syringe was connected by tubing to a fluid swivel (375 Series Single Channel Swivels, Instech Laboratories, Inc., Plymouth Meeting, PA) mounted on a balance arm above the chamber. Tubing, protected by a metal surrounding spring, connected the swivel to the subject's catheter.

Subjects were placed in chambers during daily 1-h experimental sessions in which subjects were initially trained with responses producing methamphetamine injections under a FR 5-response schedule (each fifth response produced a 0.022 mg/kg/injection of methamphetamine). During these sessions, the white house light was illuminated when methamphetamine injections were available. A single nose poke in the left hole turned on the red stimulus light within that hole for 0.5 s. Completion of each FR 5 requirement turned off the house light, delivered the methamphetamine injection, and was followed by a 20-s timeout (TO) period during which all lights were off and responses were recorded but had no scheduled consequences. After the TO, the house light was illuminated and the FR schedule was again in effect. When response rates were sufficiently high to produce 25 injections per session and were reliable from one session to the next, training sessions with methamphetamine (M) and saline (S) injections were conducted in a double-alternation sequence (e.g., ...MMSSMMSS..., where M—methamphetamine and S—saline).

When the response rates were reliably higher during methamphetamine sessions than during saline sessions, tests (T) of substitutions with saline or various doses of methamphetamine, heroin, or mitragynine were assessed by inserting those tests between repeats of the double-alternation sequence [e.g., ...MSTSMTMST...]. Each dose was tested once in each of the six subjects. Subsequently, the effects of mitragynine on heroin or methamphetamine self-administration were assessed by administering various mitragynine doses [saline, 0.03, 0.1, 0.3, 1 and 3 mg/kg, i.p.] 5 min before test sessions as described above in which different doses of either heroin or methamphetamine were available for self-administration. The sequence of mitragynine dose testing was balanced among rats using a Latin square design.

Numbers of responses were tabulated for each subject and analyzed with one-way analyses of variance (ANOVA) with drug dose as a factor. Post hoc analyses were conducted to assess contributions to significant effects using Holm-Sidak Multiple Comparisons versus saline. The levels of inactive responses were separately analyzed using one-way ANOVAs.

Drugs Mitragynine was obtained in "technical grade" from Carbosynth Limited (Compton, Berkshire, UK) and was dissolved in Tween 20 and DMSO, then diluted to the necessary concentration with 0.9% NaCl. Heroin HCl and methamphetamine HCl were obtained from the Hubei Public Security Bureau and were dissolved in 0.9% NaCl.

Results

Receptor binding assays The K_i value for the displacement of [^{3}H]DAMGO from the μ-opioid receptor by mitragynine was 502 nM, which indicated greater affinity for that receptor than that for κ- and δ-opioid receptors (Table 1). The K_i values for the displacement of [^{3}H]U-69,593 and [^{3}H]DADLE from κ- and δ-opioid receptors, respectively, were significantly greater than that for displacement of [^{3}H]DAMGO. The affinity of mitragynine for the μ-opioid receptor was substantially lower than that for either heroin or morphine (Table 1). Values for heroin are likely due entirely to the affinity of its metabolite 6-acetylmorphine (Inturrisi et al. 1983).

Drug self-administration The dose-effect curves for heroin and methamphetamine were biphasic for active responses

(Fig. 1, center and right panels, filled symbols), with maximal effects at 0.01 and 0.022 mg/kg/injection, respectively. The ANOVA indicated that the differences in the mean values among heroin doses were greater than would be expected by chance ($F_{4,20} = 8.32$, $P < 0.001$). A similar result for dose was obtained with the ANOVA for methamphetamine ($F_{4,20} = 76.2$, $P < 0.001$). In contrast, no dose of mitragynine increased responding to levels greater than those obtained with saline (Fig. 1, left panel, filled symbols). However, the ANOVA indicated that the differences in the mean values among mitragynine doses were greater than would be expected by chance ($F_{5,25} = 3.05$, $P = 0.028$). Post hoc analysis indicated that the significance in the overall ANOVA was a result of the decreases in responding that were observed at the 3.0 mg/kg/injection dose (Holm-Sidak Multiple Comparisons versus saline ($t = 3.49$, $P = 0.009$). The levels of inactive responses (Fig. 1, open symbols) were uniformly low and were not different from saline with increases in dose per injection for any of the compounds.

Treatment with mitragynine before sessions at 3.0 mg/kg decreased the maximal levels of active responses maintained by heroin (Fig. 2, left panel). Lower doses (0.1 to 1.0 mg/kg) of mitragynine generally had little effect. The ANOVA indicated significant differences in the mean values for the different doses of heroin ($F_{3,32} = 13.7$, $P < 0.001$) and mitragynine ($F_{4,32} = 16.7$, $P < 0.001$). Mitragynine had no significant effect on inactive responses (data not shown).

In contrast to the effects on heroin self-administration, mitragynine did not significantly affect responding maintained by methamphetamine injection. The ANOVA indicated that the effect of mitragynine dose ($F_{3,15} = 1.69$, $P = 0.213$) was not larger than random sampling variability. The right panel of Fig. 2 shows the lack of effect on the maximal rates of responding maintained by 0.022 mg/kg/injection of methamphetamine (triangles) across the range of doses of mitragynine from those having no effect to those decreasing rates of responding maintained by heroin (circles).

Discussion

In the present study, the self-administration of mitragynine was assessed and compared to that of heroin in rats trained to self-administer methamphetamine. In contrast to heroin, mitragynine did not maintain response rates greater than those obtained with saline injection. In addition, the effects of presession injections of mitragynine were assessed on responding maintained by heroin and methamphetamine. Mitragynine dose-dependently decreased rates of responding maintained by heroin but had little effect on responding maintained by methamphetamine across the same range of mitragynine doses. These results suggest a limited liability for abuse of mitragynine, perhaps due to its activity as a biased agonist (Kruegel et al. 2016; Váradi et al. 2016) and the

The control rates of responding maintained were 2.42 and 1.49 responses per minute during the 1-h session for methamphetamine and heroin, respectively. Note that the dose of mitragynine (3.0 mg/kg) that decreased self-administration of heroin had little effect on responses maintained by methamphetamine injection possible specific reduction of opioid abuse by mitragynine treatment.

Hemby et al. (2018) also investigated mitragynine self-administration in rats. In that study, subjects trained to self-administer morphine did not self-administer mitragynine at doses approximating 0.07 to 0.43 mg/kg/injection (assuming 350-g rats). Those doses were at most 5.7-fold greater on a molar basis than the 50 μg/injection dose of morphine that maintained maximal response rates. The present study found an approximate 200-fold lower affinity of mitragynine than morphine at μ-opioid receptors in rat native tissue. Thus, the present study examined higher doses of mitragynine.

The comparison of mitragynine to heroin in the present study is complicated by the fact that heroin is a prodrug for morphine and 6-acetylmorphine (Inturrisi et al. 1983; Way et al. 1965) and is inactive in binding the μ-opioid receptor. The binding affinity obtained for heroin is likely entirely due to the affinity of the metabolite 6-acetylmorphine which can be detected in the binding assay tubes (Inturrisi et al. 1983). However, likely due to its lipophilicity (Way et al. 1960; Oldendorf et al. 1972), heroin is approximately 10-fold more potent than morphine (on a mg of the salt form basis) in a rat self-administration procedure (e.g., Hiranita et al. 2014). This potency difference renders the minimally effective dose of heroin the equivalent of morphine at 0.03 mg/kg/injection (or 0.04 μmol/kg/injection). The highest presently studied dose of mitragynine (3.0 mg or 7.53 μmol /kg/injection) approximates that necessary to ensure that a sufficient molar dose was studied. In addition, the highest tested dose per injection of mitragynine suppressed responding below levels obtained with saline, indicating that the range of mitragynine doses presently studied included those with biological activity.

There are several reasons to exercise caution in generalizing from the absence of mitragynine self-administration. First, the robust self-administration of several drugs of abuse occurs under some conditions but not others. Possibly the most pronounced example is nicotine for which there are numerous positive and negative outcomes (e.g., Caggiula et al. 2002; Kohut and Bergman 2016). Further, certain behavioral or pharmacological histories may predispose or mitigate robust self-administration (Young and Woods 1981; Hiranita et al. 2014). The use of an opioid rather than methamphetamine for training subjects may have facilitated mitragynine self-administration. However, a previous finding showed that several opioid agonists maintained responding comparably in subjects trained with methamphetamine or heroin (Hiranita et al. 2014). Nonetheless, it remains possible that circumstances may yet be found under which mitragynine is reliably self-administered. In addition, and as described above, there are several studies indicating place conditioning with mitragynine injections. Thus, while the present findings with a self-administration procedure suggest a relatively low abuse liability of mitragynine, further studies would add assurance to that conclusion.

In the present study, pretreatment with mitragynine dose-dependently decreased heroin self-administration, and those decreases were more profound than those for the self-administration of methamphetamine. As methamphetamine has psychomotor stimulant effects, accumulation over the course of the session may have mitigated the response rate decreasing effects of mitragynine that were obtained with heroin self-administration. The total intake of methamphetamine within a session from the present study averaged about 0.054 mg/kg, distributed across a 1-h session. A single bolus dose of 0.1 mg/kg (i.p.) of methamphetamine has reliable direct behavioral effects on rats responding under ratio-type schedules (e.g., Mechner and Latranyi 1963), suggesting that accumulated methamphetamine did not offset the effects of mitragynine on response rates. Nonetheless, a comparison of effects of mitragynine on heroin self-administration with those on food-reinforced responding would add clarification to the selectivity of mitragynine.

Mitragynine at an active dose decreased the maximal self-administration of heroin rather than shifting the dose-effect curve rightward as is typically obtained by treatment with opioid antagonists (Bertalmio and Woods 1989; Harrigan and Downs 1978). The contrast among these effects along with the documented opioid-agonist effects of mitragynine indicates that the mechanism of mitragynine-induced decreases in heroin self-administration is not due to an antagonism of heroin effects. Previous studies of opioid pretreatments have produced similar decreases in maximal self-administration of opioid agonists (e.g., Hiranita et al. 2014; Winger et al. 1992). Noting the similarity of these downward shifts to the effects of food prefeeding on responding maintained by food reinforcement, Hiranita et al. (2014) suggested this outcome could reflect a satiating effect of the drug pretreatment on opioid self-administration (see also Zanettini et al. 2018). Satiation was suggested previously as explanation for the clinical efficacy of methadone in treating opioid abuse (Dole and Nyswander 1965).

Several reports have provided information that human self-administration of mitragynine is maintained by alleviation of opioid withdrawal symptoms (e.g., Grundmann 2017; Smith and Lawson 2017; Swogger and Walsh 2018). For example, Vicknasingam et al. (2010) reported that treatment of opioid withdrawal was self-reported by 62.5% and 46.9%, respectively, of short- and long-term kratom users in Malaysia. In addition, Cheaha et al. (2017) reported that an extract of Mitragyna speciosa suppressed naloxone-precipitated fecal excretions; however, it did not suppress naloxone-precipitated jumping in mice. Those results suggest some direct effects of mitragynine on opioid withdrawal, which has been historically used as evidence of its own potential to produce dependence (Himmelsbach 1941). However, the differences between the effects of mitragynine on the two different withdrawal signs in the Cheaha et al. (2017) study suggest some reservations regarding too extensive a conclusion. Further studies should examine the effects of the various pure alkaloids of the plant, both on precipitated withdrawal and that unfolding after cessation of agonist treatment. Studies over a range of doses, and with a wider variety of withdrawal signs and time frames would add substantially to consideration of kratom physiological dependence liability.

The present study suggests that mitragynine has limited abuse liability from the perspective of self-administration procedures. Those results should prompt other studies to further examine mitragynine self-administration across a broader range of conditions to assess the generality of the findings. Further mitragynine produced a decrease in self-administration of heroin at doses that did not affect self-administration of methamphetamine. These outcomes suggest potential for use of mitragynine in treating opioid abuse though it should be noted that mitragynine has a variety of other behavioral effects that may limit that potential (Hassan et al. 2017). Nonetheless, the current prevalence of opioid abuse and its consequent and multiple impacts on public health, it appears at present that mitragynine is deserving of more extensive exploration for the development of a therapeutic used for treating opioid abuse.

Learning Overview: Attendees will be able to better compare the respiratory depressant effects and relative toxicity of oral mitragynine and oxycodone.

Impact on the Forensic Science Community: Lack of respiratory depression following high-dose mitragynine in rats questions the appropriateness of designating kratom as cause of death in postmortem cases.

Mitragynine, the primary active alkaloid in kratom and partial μ-opioid receptor agonist, has substantially different pharmacology from the full μ-opioid receptor agonists morphine and oxycodone. Mitragynine does not recruit β-arrestin for G-protein signaling, has activity at adrenergic receptors and a lower risk of respiratory depression, acute poisoning, death, and abuse-related effects. The kratom alkaloid, 7-hydroxy-mitragynine (7-OH-MG), constitutes <1.5% of the total alkaloid content, is more potent at the opioid receptor than mitragynine and a mitragynine metabolite. Mitragynine is not scheduled in the Controlled Substance Act; however, the FDA recommended scheduling of mitragynine in 2016, in part out of safety concerns, though the request was rescinded by the Assistant Secretary of Health in 2018. Mitragynine is taken by millions of people in Southeast Asia and the US as a mild stimulant and analgesic and to treat opioid dependence and withdrawal.

In 2020, FDA recently recommended a rat model for evaluating drug respiratory depressant effects, utilizing oxycodone as a positive control. We employed this model to compare respiratory depression following 20, 40, 80, 240 and 400 mg/kg oral mitragynine and 6.75, 60 and 150 mg/kg oral oxycodone in rats. Oxycodone, mitragynine and 7-OH-mitragynine were quantified by LC-MS/MS pre-dose, 1, 2, 4, 6, 8 and 12 h after administration. Blood gases were determined at the same time points with the VetScan i-STAT Alinity V Handheld Analyzer. Clinical observations of opioid associated effects and toxicity were performed throughout.

A significant decrease in oxygen saturation compared to baseline sO2 following the 60 and 150 mg/kg oxycodone doses was observed, with no significant differences in sO2 following 20, 40, 80, 240 and 400 mg/kg mitragynine over 12 h. Partial CO2 pressure change from baseline was significantly increased after 60 and 150 mg/kg oxycodone hydrochloride, but not following any mitragynine dose. Two animals receiving oxycodone, one at 60 and one at 150 mg/kg, died after dosing, and 66.7% and 100% of animals receiving these doses had abnormal clinical observations. One animal following 240mg/kg and multiple animals following 400 mg/kg mitragynine had abnormal clinical observations. Median blood oxycodone Cmax were 33.5, 39.9 and 131 ng/mL following 6.75, 60 and 150 mg/kg oxycodone, respectively, with Tmax at 1 h. Median mitragynine Cmax were 723, 1665, 2140, 6278 and 6341 ng/mL after 20, 40, 80, 240 and 400 mg/kg mitragynine, respectively, with Tmax generally at 1 h. 7-OH-mitragynine Cmax were 11.0, 17.4, 18.9, 32.0 and 62.5 ng/mL after 20, 40, 80, 240 and 400 mg/kg mitragynine, respectively, with Tmax at 1 h. 7-OH-mitragynine concentrations were approximately 100-fold lower than mitragynine concentrations in the same sample.

Mitragynine doses as high as 400 mg/kg did not produce any clinically relevant or significantly measurable effects on respiration based on blood gas measurement, whereas 60 & 150 mg/kg oxycodone resulted in moderate to severe respiratory depression in rats. Similarly, there were no abnormal clinical observations after 20, 40 and 80 mg/kg, one after 240 mg/kg and multiple after 400 mg/kg oral mitragynine, while 60 and 150 mg/kg oxycodone produced many abnormal observations and two deaths.

Conclusion: Oral mitragynine had little respiratory depression in rats following up to 400mg/kg doses, much higher doses than generally taken by humans, suggesting caution in attributing cause of death to mitragynine respiratory depression in postmortem deaths.

ABSTRACT

Kratom use appears to be increasing across the United States, increasing attention to deaths in which kratom use was detected. Most such deaths have been ascribed to fentanyl, heroin, benzodiazepines, prescription opioids, cocaine and other causes (e.g., homicide, suicide and various preexisting diseases). Because kratom has certain opioid-like effects (e.g., pain relief), and is used by some people as a substitute for opioids for pain or addiction, kratom has been compared to "narcotic-like opioids" (e.g., morphine) with respect to risk of death despite evidence that its primary alkaloid, mitragynine, carries little of the signature respiratory depressing effects of morphine-like opioids. This commentary summarizes animal toxicology data, surveys and mortality data associated with opioids and kratom to provide a basis for estimating relative mortality risk. Population-level mortality estimates attributed to opioids as compared to kratom, and the per user mortality risks of opioids as compared to kratom are provided. By any of our assessments, it appears that the risk of overdose death is > 1000 times greater for opioids than for kratom. The limitations of the mortality risk estimate warrants caution in individuals with unknown factors such as use of other substances and medications, or other preexisting conditions. More research on kratom safety and risks is needed, as is regulation of commercial kratom products to ensure that consumers are informed by FDA labeling and that kratom products are not contaminated or adulterated with other substances.

1. Introduction and background

Kratom use appears to be increasing across the United State (US), drawing increased attention to deaths in which any level of kratom alkaloids (e.g., mitragynine (MG) and 7-hydroxyMG) has been detected in a decedent's plasma or any evidence suggesting that the decedent had consumed kratom. Mitragynine is primarily used as a marker for kratom exposure because it is the most prevalent alkaloid in kratom preparations whereas 7-hydroxyMG is generally at levels that are unlikely to contribute to pharmacological effects (Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018). The National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA, 2019a) provides the following summary on its "What is Kratom" web page:

> There have been multiple reports of deaths in people who had ingested kratom, but most have involved other substances. A 2019 paper analyzing data from the National Poison Data System found that between 2011-2017 there were 11 deaths associated with kratom exposure. Nine of the 11 deaths reported in this study involved kratom plus other drugs and medicines, such as diphenhydramine (an antihistamine), alcohol, caffeine, benzodiazepines, fentanyl, and cocaine. Two deaths were reported following exposure from kratom alone with no other reported substances. In 2017, the FDA identified at least 44 deaths related to kratom, with at least one case investigated as possible use of pure kratom. The FDA reports note that many of the kratom-associated deaths appeared to have resulted from adulterated products or taking kratom with other potent substances, including illicit drugs, opioids, benzodiazepines, alcohol, gabapentin, and over-the-counter medications, such as cough syrup. Also, there have been some reports of kratom packaged as dietary supplements or dietary ingredients that were laced with other compounds that caused deaths. People should check with their health care providers about the safety of mixing kratom with other medicines. [Italics added].

As implied by NIDA's summary, the actual contribution of kratom to these deaths is uncertain. Similarly, as discussed in a Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's (CDC) Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report (MMWR) of 91 deaths that medical examiners and coroners had listed as “kratom involved” most included evidence of fentanyl, heroin, benzodiazepines, prescription opioids, and/or cocaine (Gershman et al., 2019; Olsen et al., 2019). In the seven cases that did not list a drug other than kratom as being detected, the authors noted that exposure to other drugs could not be ruled out due to inconsistencies in testing by medical examiners. The MMWR report drew no conclusion about the potential contribution of kratom to any of the deaths beyond stating that some level of exposure had occurred. The high variability of mitragynine levels ranging from 5.6–29,000 ng/mL detected in deaths associated with kratom exposure furthermore questions the association between mitragynine levels and toxicity (Papsun et al., 2019). Nonetheless, media headlines include phrases such as “kratom-linked” deaths, “kratom overdose deaths”, and “kratom deaths” (see e.g., Galvin, 2019; Kaur, 2019; Miller, 2019).

In fact, while the contribution of kratom to death in some cases cannot be ruled out, there has yet to be an overdose death from kratom alone in either the US or South East Asia where heavy kratom use is common (Prozialeck et al., 2019). This is consistent with pharmacologic studies and epidemiological investigations in Southeast Asia of kratom, which indicate that, in contrast to morphine-like opioids, kratom fails to produce life-threatening respiratory depression and generally is not associated with the personal and societal impairment associated with morphine-like opioids (Prozialeck et al., 2019; Singh et al., 2017; Veltri and Grundmann, 2019). This is likely because MG and 7-hydroxyMG function as partial agonists with respect to respiratory depressant effects due to their G-protein biased signaling mechanism of action (Kruegel et al., 2016; Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018; Váradi et al., 2016).

Animal studies that have attempted to determine the lethal dose of kratom have also failed to document acute overdose deaths with similar symptoms to morphine. Rather they have found that at dose equivalents of hundreds or more times the typical human dose range, some animals die over days or weeks due to a variety of causes unrelated to respiratory depression (Henningfield et al., 2018a; Prozialeck et al., 2019). For example, a study in which 100 mg/kg MG, p.o. administered to rats for 28 days produced only an increase in liver weight (Sabetghadam et al., 2013). No evidence of toxicity was found at doses as high as 920 mg/kg MG in dogs (Macko et al., 1972), or as high as 807 mg/kg MG in rats (Macko et al., 1972). Studies in rats reported lethal effects of 200 mg/kg total alkaloid extract of M. speciosa given intragastrically (Azizi et al., 2010; Janchawee et al., 2007); however, respiratory depression was not observed.

2. Surveillance data and user estimates can inform relative mortality risk

There is no nationally projectable survey for estimating the number of kratom consumers in the U.S.; however, it appears plausible that there are presently approximately 10–16 million or more current, regular kratom users in the US.[1] This suggests that there may be 48 million or more kratom exposures per month or 576 million per year over the past 1–2 years, which in turn suggests a very low rate of serious adverse events and deaths involving kratom.

Four internet surveys of > 20,000 kratom users, > 20,000 comments to the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), and a survey of > 500 people in treatment for opioid use disorder indicate that some fraction of kratom consumers are using kratom as an alternative to opioids (Coe et al., 2019; Grundmann, 2017a, 2017b; Henningfield et al., 2018a; Smith and Lawson, 2017). The opioids had been used for self-treating pain or addiction, and a prevailing motivator is the user's assumption that kratom carries far less risk of overdose death. This is consistent with opinions of many kratom experts in the US (Grundmann et al., 2018; Swogger and Walsh, 2018; Henningfield et al., 2018a, 2018b), as well as in South East Asia where kratom use is very common by itself and in place of opioids (Prozialeck et al., 2019).

In the context of the US opioid epidemic in which 46,600 opioid-attributed deaths were estimated by the CDC in 2017 (CDC, 2018), and which has been rapidly escalating for more than a decade (Jalal et al., 2018), it is important to provide some basis for estimating the relative risk of kratom-associated deaths as compared to morphine-like opioids. Some insight can be provided by a comparison of the numbers of deaths attributed to opioids with the numbers that have been reported as possibly involving kratom by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) and NIDA. Two approaches are presented in Tables 1 and 2.

Table 1 provides a comparison of deaths attributed to opioids (primarily fentanyl, heroin, and prescription opioids) in the US in 2017, with various estimates of deaths that have been reported by the FDA as “associated with” kratom. The table includes the 43[2] kratom-associated deaths reported by FDA from the years 2011 to 2017, as well as an estimate that excludes deaths in which other causes of death were established as more likely than kratom, and an estimate of deaths from 2016 and 2017 in the US only to provide a more comparable basis to opioid deaths that are based on 2017 data.

Table 2 provides comparisons of death rates and relative risks per estimated number of kratom users and nonmedical opioid users.

Because all currently available information about the kratom user population comes from online or small sample surveys, the actual number of kratom users may vary considerably from the estimated approximately 16 million. However, the current number is the best and most conservative estimate for the US.

In all cases of kratom-associated, kratom-involved, kratom-positive, or kratom-reported cases the actual substance reported was the indole alkaloid, MG. In some cases, the substance was semi-quantified while in others it was simply reported as positive assuming the presence of kratom extract. In still other cases, the substance was assumed based on reports of use from family members. However, there is currently no correlation between MG blood levels and observed behavioral, adverse, or lethal effects. It is therefore unclear whether MG serves as a good indicator for reporting kratom intoxication and especially a kratom fatality. Some animal in vitro and in vivo experiments indicate that the structural analogue 7-hydroxy-MG may have a stronger affinity for the opioid receptor and pose a higher mortality risk. There are also initial studies showing that MG is metabolized to 7-hydroxy-MG by the liver; thus, the degree of potential toxicity may be limited and subject to interindividual metabolic variability (Kamble et al., 2019; Avery et al., 2019; Kruegel et al., 2019). As discussed by Kruegel et al. (2019), the processes mediating the metabolism of MG to 7-hydroxy-MG and the neuropharmacology of these substances may help explain the new findings related to mitragynine and the more favorable safety profile as compared to other substances that have morphine-like opioid receptor agonist activity.

3. Conclusions

Kratom is not without risk, but the risk estimates as calculated by any of the approaches used, relative to opioids, suggest that morphine-like opioids carry an overdose risk of a thousand or more times greater than kratom. This conclusion has the limitation that some kratom users

[1] The American Kratom Association surveyed export data from several Indonesian kratom grower's commercial export associations that document an average of 1.950 metric tons of kratom are exported on a monthly basis to the U.S. Based on an estimated daily 4–6 g/day per consumer, this yields a potential range 10.83 million–16.25 million kratom consumers. This should be considered a very rough estimate that does not account for heavy kratom users or the number of light non-daily users, which surveys suggest represent the majority of current kratom users. See http://www.americankratom.org/images/Kratom_Population_2019.pdf.

[2] Although FDA released 44 reports of kratom associated deaths, at least one case was reported twice as ID Nos. 14449343 and 14254346.

[g] As discussed by Scholten and Henningfield (2016a, 2016b), properly prescribed opioids carry a low risk of overdose or abuse, but prescription opioid associated reports typically include people who were not prescribed or who obtained prescriptions without legitimate medical need. Further, as discussed by Sullum, other substances (licit and illicit) appear to be strong drivers of overdose attributed to prescription opioids.

inherently carry or assume factors that might greatly increase the risk of kratom-associated mortality, e.g., use in combination with opioids, sedatives, alcohol or other drugs, or some preexisting disease states that may make kratom use especially risky. The fact that the causes of deaths that were associated with kratom use varied widely and included liver disease, homicide, suicide, trauma, and overdose with clearly lethal levels of other drugs (Babin, 2018; FDA, 2017; Henningfield et al., 2018b), cannot form the basis for concluding that co-existing conditions make kratom use more or less risky compared to opioids.

More studies of kratom safety are needed. As kratom use continues to increase, it is likely that among the 2,813,503 total US deaths per year (Kochanek et al., 2019), an increasing number will be cases in which kratom use was suspected or detected without determination or consideration of the potential involvement of other licit and/or illicit drug(s), in part due to inadequate postmortem toxicology data and testing protocols (Olsen et al., 2019; Gershman et al., 2019). While toxicology data in humans needs to be further explored, initial data indicate that long-term kratom use in traditional settings does not result in changes in several biochemical parameters related to safety (Singh et al., 2018). In addition, as is the case with many other dietary and herbal supplements, it is possible that adverse effects may result from interactions of kratom with other herbs as well as with medicines. Further studies will be important to guide labeling and consumer information. Of particular importance is a major nationally projectable survey that would provide a basis for estimating the number of past year and past month kratom users, amount of use, mode or type of kratom use, reasons for use, association with illness and other drug and substance use, and the extent and geographic distribution of people using kratom in place of opioids who might be at risk of relapse to opioid use if kratom was banned at the local, state or federal level. Because many deaths possibly involving kratom appear to have also involved opioids and other drugs that are known to carry a high risk of overdose death, a regulatory approach that establishes standards for kratom product purity, packaging, labeling, and alkaloid content is urgently needed to reduce the risks for persons who purchase lawfully marketed products. In this context, it is promising that four states have passed kratom consumer protection laws setting standards for kratom purity, labeling, minimum age of purchase, requiring registration and will include oversight. Legislators in other states are developing similar proposals (American Kratom Association, 2019).

ABSTRACT

Background: Kratom, a Southeast Asian plant with opioid-receptor mediated effects, has emerged as a potential substance of abuse, with limited data on its use and effects. This study characterized kratom user demographics, use patterns, and perceived drug effects.

Methods: A cross-sectional, anonymous online survey was conducted between January and December 2017.

Results: 2,798 kratom users – mean age 40 (SD = 12); predominantly White (90 %), female (61 %), and located in the US (97 %) – completed the survey. Kratom was primarily taken orally in doses of 1 – 3 g (49 %), with daily use (59 %) being most common. Kratom was used for pain (91 %), anxiety (67 %), and depression (65 %), with high ratings of effectiveness. 1,144 (41 %) used kratom to stop or reduce prescription or illicit opioid use, citing decreased opioid withdrawal and craving related to kratom use, with 411 reporting > 1-year continuous abstinence from opioids attributed to kratom use. Roughly one-third of respondents reported adverse effects of kratom, largely rated as mild in severity and lasting ≤ 24 h. Seventeen participants (0.6 %) sought treatment for adverse effects. Fifty-six individuals (2 %) met DSM-5 criteria for a past-year moderate or severe kratom-related substance use disorder (SUD). When asked how troubled they felt regarding their kratom use, the mean (SD) rating was 3.2 (9.8) on a scale from 0 to 100.

Conclusion: Kratom is used among White, middle-aged Americans for symptoms of pain, anxiety, depression, and opioid withdrawal. Although regular use was typical, kratom-related SUD and serious adverse effects were uncommon. Additional research on kratom epidemiology and pharmacology is imperative in light of the present opioid epidemic.

1. Introduction

Kratom (Mitragyna speciosa) is an evergreen tree in the coffee (Rubiaceae) family native to Southeast Asia (SEA), where it has a long history of traditional use (Hassan et al., 2013; Singh et al., 2016). Kratom leaf or extract are typically ingested orally for treating pain and other medical conditions, and to aid in the performance of agricultural and manual labor (Hassan et al., 2013; Singh et al., 2016). Kratom and its alkaloids have been classified as atypical opioids because they are structurally and biologically distinct from classical opioids (e.g., morphine) that are derived from the poppy (Papaveraceae) family (Raffa et al., 2018). Kratom has emerged as a natural product available for purchase over the internet (Babu et al., 2008; Prozialeck, 2016), and has been identified as a Drug of Concern by the US Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA, 2017). Surveys and case studies suggest many Americans are using kratom to self-medicate a range of conditions including pain and opioid withdrawal (Boyer et al., 2007; Coe et al., 2019; Grundmann, 2017; Henningfield et al., 2018; Smith and Lawson, 2017; Swogger et al., 2015), although there are limited empirical data available to support a therapeutic benefit for such use.

Kratom contains more than three dozen unique indole alkaloids, including its primary alkaloid mitragynine, which makes up approximately 66 % of the total alkaloids in kratom leaves (Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018; Takayama, 2004). Preclinical studies of mitragynine suggest it may hold potential toward developing new and efficacious pain medications (Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018; Macko et al., 1972; Takayama, 2004). Mitragynine is a G-protein-biased partial agonist of the mu-opioid receptor that does not recruit the β-arrestin signaling pathway like classical opioids (Kruegel et al., 2016; Váradi et al., 2016). It is thus hypothesized to confer analgesic effects with lower risk of respiratory depression than classical opioids (Kruegel et al., 2016; Siuda et al., 2017; Váradi et al., 2016). Mitragynine and kratom extracts have shown robust antinociceptive effects in rats, mice, and dogs, suppressing nociceptive response to both mechanical and thermal noxious stimuli with minimal respiratory depression (Hassan et al., 2013; Macko et al., 1972; Matsumoto et al., 1996; Sabetghadam et al., 2010). Furthermore, these antinociceptive effects are blocked by the opioid antagonist naloxone, suggesting an opioid-receptor mediated mechanism of action (Matsumoto et al., 1996; Sabetghadam et al., 2010). Abuse liability testing of mitragynine in rats has shown that it reduces morphine self-administration but does not substitute for morphine, and it does not engender or maintain intravenous self-administration, suggesting low abuse liability (Hemby et al., 2018). In addition, pretreating rats with mitragynine has also been shown to reduce heroin self-administration though mitragynine itself is not self-administered (Yue et al., 2018). However, 7-hydroxymitragynine, a minor alkaloid present at low levels (~2 % of alkaloids) in kratom leaves (Ponglux et al., 1994) has shown mu-opioid receptor-mediated analgesic effects (Matsumoto et al., 2004), and has been found to substitute for morphine and engender and maintain intravenous self-administration in rats in a dose-dependent manner (Hemby et al., 2018).

Survey studies indicate kratom has been used as a substitute for opioids and to alleviate opioid withdrawal both in SEA (Vicknasingam et al., 2010) and the US (Boyer et al., 2008; Coe et al., 2019; Grundmann, 2017). Internet-based studies have found that in the US, kratom is predominantly being used by White, middle-aged, middle-income, college-educated individuals for treatment of pain, opioid withdrawal, and mental health conditions, with relatively minor (e.g. stomach upset), dose-dependent adverse effects (Grundmann, 2017; Henningfield et al., 2018; Swogger et al., 2015). Among a sample of 8,049 kratom users in the US, more than a quarter of respondents reported using kratom to reduce illicit (e.g. heroin; n = 539) or prescription (e.g. opioid medication; n = 1813) drug dependence or withdrawal (Grundmann, 2017).

To date, the behavioral pharmacology and abuse liability of kratom have not been well-characterized in humans. One study conducted in Thailand that administered different doses of kratom tea to 10 chronic kratom-using males and evaluated blood and urine mitragynine levels found linear pharmacokinetics, time to maximum plasma concentration of roughly 1 h, and a terminal half-life of about one day (Trakulsrichai et al., 2015). Otherwise, no controlled laboratory research with kratom or its alkaloids has been conducted in humans. Given the lack of controlled human studies, it is important to understand more about kratom use patterns, users' motives, and outcomes following kratom exposure. This information can help inform prospective evaluations of kratom for different indications as well as regulatory decisions regarding scheduling. The present study collected demographic and self-report data from individuals who use kratom to extend the limited existing literature on contemporary kratom use.

2. Methods

2.1. Data collection

We conducted this cross-sectional, anonymous online survey to further characterize kratom user demographics, reasons for and patterns of kratom use, and perceived benefits of use. Self-reported adverse effects associated with kratom use were examined, including potential kratom withdrawal symptoms. Finally, indicators of abuse liability and problematic kratom use were assessed. All data were collected anonymously (no name or personally identifiable information recorded) using Qualtrics (Qualtrics, Provo, UT, USA). IP addresses were collected so the same person could not respond to the survey repeatedly, but were destroyed after data collection was completed. Between January 2017 and December 2017 participants were recruited using online advertisements and email announcements distributed via sites of interest to kratom users (e.g., American Kratom Association, Erowid, Reddit). Participants were required to be age 18 years or older, English language proficient, and have used kratom in the past year. Information about the purpose of the study was provided prior to beginning the survey, and by choosing to begin the survey respondents indicated their consent for voluntary participation. Participants who completed the initial pilot version of the survey through Amazon Mechanical Turk (n = 36) received $3.10 for completing the survey. Otherwise, no incentives were offered for study participation. Due to its confidential and anonymous nature, the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine Institutional Review Board determined this did not qualify as human subjects research.

2.2. Measures

Participants provided demographic information (e.g., age, highest level of education, household income), location of residence, past-year use of licit (e.g., alcohol, nicotine), illicit (e.g., heroin, psychedelics), and prescription drugs (e.g., antidepressants, prescription opiates), and lifetime medical diagnoses. The 10-item Patient-Reported Outcomes Measurement Information System Global Health (PROMIS-GH) scale was used to assess general physical and mental health (Broderick et al., 2013). Chronic pain was assessed using the 15-item Brief Pain Inventory (BPI) (Cleeland and Ryan, 1994).

Data regarding kratom use patterns, including age of kratom use initiation, frequency of use, typical dose of kratom, and route of administration were collected. Participants were asked to endorse whether they used kratom for specific conditions (e.g., pain, depression), if they would recommend kratom as a remedy for these conditions, and to rate how effective they considered kratom for these conditions using a visual analog scale (VAS) from 0 (not at all) to 100 (extremely). Participants were asked to report whether they had ever used kratom to help reduce or stop using heroin and/or licit or illicit use of pharmaceutical pain medications (e.g., Oxycontin, Percocet). Those who reported using kratom for this purpose then provided information on the perceived effectiveness of kratom to mitigate opioid use and ways in which kratom may have been useful in this capacity.

Incidence of self-reported adverse effects or side effects attributed to kratom was queried, and information on duration, severity, and medical treatment for adverse effects was collected. Similarly, potential kratom-related withdrawal was probed, with those endorsing possible kratom withdrawal completing the 16-item Subjective Opiate Withdrawal Scale (SOWS) to evaluate symptom severity (Handelsman et al., 1987). Participants rated typical subjective effects of kratom across 13 items from the Drug Effects Questionnaire (DEQ), assessing type, strength, and desirability of kratom effects associated with abuse liability (e.g., drug liking, euphoria, desire) using VAS from 0 (not at all) to 100 (extreme) (Morean et al., 2013). Additionally, participants were asked to rate how troubled or bothered they were by their kratom use using VAS from 0 (not at all) to 100 (extreme). Participants completed a DSM-5 substance use disorder (SUD) symptom checklist to assess whether past-year kratom use met diagnostic criteria for a kratom-related SUD (American Psychiatric Association, 2013; Hudziak et al., 1993).

2.3. Data analysis

Descriptive statistics were generated to determine the prevalence, means, and proportions of relevant variables. Chi-square (categorical variables) and Mann-Whitney U (continuous variables) tests were used to examine differences between those who used kratom to reduce opioid use and those who did not. To evaluate factors related to kratom use outcomes, we conducted four independent multivariate logistic regressions using Maximum Likelihood estimates for each of the following outcomes: negative effect of kratom use ≥1 lifetime/never lifetime); experience withdrawal from kratom use (≥1 symptom/0 symptoms); ever sought treatment for kratom use (yes/no); and lifetime use of kratom to reduce opioid use (yes/no). Several demographic and drug use variables were entered into the models as predictors, including: age, sex, race, relationship status, education, employment status, income, geographic region, past 12-month alcohol use, past 12-month opioid use, diagnosis of bipolar disorder, diagnosis of depression, age of first kratom use, kratom use frequency, number of kratom-related SUD symptoms, SOWS total, pain severity, experienced opioid withdrawal, and the total number of different types of opioids used in past 12 months. Data were analyzed using IBM Microsoft SPSS version 25 (IBM®, 2017), and Prism version 7.0 (GraphPad, La Jolla, CA, USA).

3. Results

3.1. Sample characteristics

Of the 4,302 individuals who began the survey, 2,826 (66 %) met all study inclusion criteria and completed the entire survey. Of these, 28 were removed due to inconsistent responses or technical issues, resulting in a final sample of 2,798 kratom users. Fifty-three percent of the final sample learned about the survey through the American Kratom Association and 44.2 % found it through Facebook or other social media websites.

Table 1 displays the means and proportions for demographic and substance use items. Respondents were on average 40.2 years old (SD = 11.8) and majority female (60.7 %). Most were married or in a committed relationship (66.5 %), employed (68.4 %), and had some college education (83.9 %). The median annual household income was between $50,000-$59,000. The largest geographic residential concentration for respondents was the U.S. South (41.0 %). Alcohol was the most commonly reported substance used in the past year (47.4 %), followed by tobacco (42.2 %), cannabis (37.2 %), and opioids (33.0 %). Roughly half the sample (52.9 %) reported ever experiencing opioid withdrawal symptoms or difficulty controlling opioid use.

3.2. Physical and psychological health

A majority of the sample (n = 1,924; 68.8 %) reported experiencing chronic pain over the past 3 months. Among this group, the mean (SD) BPI pain severity score was 4.1 (1.8), and the mean pain interference score was 4.9 (SD = 2.9), with possible scores ranging from 0 to 10 and greater scores indicating more pain or pain interference in daily activities. Pain was most commonly reported in the lower (53.8 %) and upper back (34.6 %), shoulders (33.1 %), and knees (31.3 %). Among this chronic pain group, 39.4 % reported currently taking a prescribed medication to treat pain, and 87.6 % reported current kratom use for pain.

Among the entire sample, the most commonly reported lifetime medical diagnoses (Table 1) included back pain (72.5 %), depression (65.0 %), muscle pain (62.9 %), neck pain (55.0 %), joint pain (54.5 %), panic attacks (48.1 %), and arthritis (43.8 %). PROMIS-GH physical health mean (SD) scores were 13.7 (3.2), and mental health scores were 12.8 (3.5), which both convert to standardized PROMIS-GH T-scores of approximately 45, slightly below the US general population mean of 50 (Hays et al., 2009).

3.3. Reasons for kratom use and use patterns

Most respondents endorsed using kratom for pain relief (91.3 %), and/or to treat mood-related issues such as anxiety (67.2 %), and depression (64.5 %). Among these, the majority said they would recommend kratom for pain relief (98.7 %), and mood-related issues (96.7 %). Mean (SD) efficacy ratings of kratom for treating pain on a scale from 0 (not at all) to 100 (extremely) were 83.3 (18.5); for anxiety were 76.7 (24.3); and for depression were 76.5 (25.4). Subgroups also reported using kratom for post-traumatic stress (29.6 %) or bipolar mood (24.6 %), with mean (SD) efficacy ratings of 60.2 (38.2), and 51.4 (39.9), respectively.

The mean (SD) age for kratom use initiation was 38 (12.2) years (Table 2). The majority of respondents reported using kratom ≥100 times in their lifetime (76.2 %), and most had used kratom in the 24 h before completing the survey (80.7 %). The most commonly reported typical dose range per occasion was 1−3 grams (49.0 %), followed by 4−6 g (33.4 %). Daily use was reported by the majority of respondents (59.1 %), with a mean (SD) of 2.7 (1.3) doses used per day. Ingesting kratom orally in powder form was the most common method of administration (43.6 %) followed by drinking as a prepared beverage (e.g., tea, smoothie; 37.0 %).

3.4. Kratom adverse effects

Approximately 19 % of participants reported adverse effects from kratom use (Table 2), with an additional 12.8 % reporting possible kratom-related adverse effects. Among those reporting definite or possible adverse effects, only 1 % (n = 9) indicated serious to extreme severity, and 1.9 % (n = 17) reported seeking medical treatment for adverse effects. Most adverse effects were rated mild in severity (63.2 %) and lasted ≤1 day (86.1 %). Kratom-related withdrawal symptoms were reported by 9.5 % of respondents with another 17.5 % reporting possible kratom-related withdrawal. The overall logistic regression model fit was significantly improved by including the abovementioned predictor variables (χ^2 = 580.73, $p < .001$). Logistic regression revealed that adverse effects of kratom use were significantly associated with younger age (aOR > 1.20 for people 65 years or younger; 95 % CI: 0.18, 13.42)[1], male sex (female aOR = 0.75; 95 % CI: 0.59, 0.95), having less education (aOR > 0.90 for people without a graduate/professional degree; 95 % CI: 0.35, 2.07), and lower income (aOR > 1.20 for people earning < $250k annually; 95 % CI: 0.44, 6.14), as well as past 12-month alcohol use (aOR = 0.61 for no alcohol in past 12 months; 95 % CI: 0.48, 0.76), past 12-month opioid use (aOR = 0.59 for no opioid use in past 12 months; 95 % CI: 0.45, 0.76), kratom-related withdrawal (i.e., SOWS total; aOR < 0.01 for SOWS total < 50; 95 % CI: 0.00, 1.21 × 10^{10}), and the number of opioids used in the past 12-months (aOR > 2.45 for people whose used 8+ different types of opioids; 95 % CI: 0.00, 1.44 × 10^{13}). Self-reported depression (aOR = 0.68 for no depression; 95 % CI: 0.54, 0.87), pain severity (χ^2 = 9240.28, $p < .001$), and kratom-related DSM-5 SUD symptoms (χ^2 = 149.93, $p < .001$) were also related to kratom adverse effects.

3.5. Symptoms of withdrawal following kratom abstinence

The mean (SD) SOWS score among these individuals was 8.8 (8.4), indicating mild opiate withdrawal symptoms (i.e., SOWS score < 11). Most respondents (87.7 %) did not meet diagnostic criteria for a past-year kratom-related substance use disorder (SUD) based on the DSM-5 symptom checklist. Less than 3 % met diagnostic criteria for moderate and severe kratom-related SUD. When asked how troubled or bothered they were by their kratom use on a scale from 0 (not at all) to 100 (extremely), the mean (SD) response across the entire study sample was 3.2 (9.8). The most highly rated subjective effects of kratom on a 0–100 VAS (Table 2) included 'good effects' (M = 86.4; SD = 23.0) and 'drug liking' (M = 85.7; SD = 23.7), followed by 'alert' (M = 49.8; SD = 30.9) and 'stimulated' (M = 41.3; SD = 28.6), with lower ratings of 'euphoric' (M = 25.1; SD = 27.1) and 'high' (M = 12.0; SD = 20.1), suggesting potential differences in subjective effects profiles of kratom from classic opioids (Walsh et al., 2008). The overall logistic regression model fit was significantly improved by including the abovementioned predictor variables (χ^2 = 4015.85, $p < .001$). Logistic regression analyses revealed that experiencing kratom withdrawal was significantly predicted by the number of kratom-related DSM-5 SUD symptoms (χ^2 = 3301.90, $p < .001$), sex (female aOR = 0.21; 95 % CI: 0.09, 0.47), total SOWS score (χ^2 = 77.25, $p < .001$), and having experienced opioid withdrawal (aOR = 0.14 for never experiencing opioid withdrawal; 95 % CI: 0.05, 0.36). Seeking treatment for kratom use was also significantly predicted by the number of kratom-related DSM-5 SUD symptoms (all aOR < 0.01 for < 9 DSM-5 SUD symptoms; 95 % CI: 0.00, < 0.01) and SOWS total (all aOR < 0.01 for SOWS total < 50; 95 % CI: 0.00, < 0.01).

3.6. Kratom for opioid use reduction

A subsample of 1,144 individuals (40.9 %) reported using kratom to reduce or stop opioid use, including prescription opioid medications and heroin. Kratom was endorsed by this group as effectively treating their opioid withdrawal symptoms (87.3 %; n = 999), addressing underlying pain related to opioid use (86.1 %; n = 985), reducing opioid cravings (79.6 %; n = 911), and improving mood while tapering off opioids (72.0 %; n = 824). Kratom was widely reported to reduce opioid withdrawal symptoms among this group, including anxiety (86.5 %; n = 989), body aches (86.5 %; n = 989), restlessness (86.4 %; n = 988), and insomnia (79.5 %; n = 910).

Among these respondents, Percocet (33.2 %; n = 380) and Vicodin (32.3 %; n = 369) were the most commonly used opioids in the past year, and heroin exhibited the least past-year use (5.8 %; n = 66). Among this group 122 (10.7 %) reported past-year Suboxone use, 89 (7.8 %) reported past-year methadone use, and 411 (35.9 %) reported no past-year opioid use. Most of these respondents (74.2 %; n = 849) reported achieving ≥6 months of abstinence from opioids attributed to kratom use. The large majority of these participants (99.2 %; n = 1,135) said they would recommend kratom as an opioid withdrawal treatment. The overall logistic regression model fit was significantly

[1] Adjusted odds ratios (aOR) are included where data showed a significant monotonic relationship. χ^2 values are included where the predictor variable had a significant non-linear relationship to the dependent variable. Where multiple categories exist for a variable, the 95% CI shows the range of minimum-to-maximum for all catgeories.

Abbreviation: No, number; SD, standard deviation; SOWS, Subjective Opioid Withdrawal Scale; SUD, Substance Use Disorder.

[a] Opioid reduction users were classified as those who responded affirmatively to the question, "Have you ever used kratom to help you cut down or stop using heroin or prescription pain medications (such as Vicodin, Percocet, Oxycontin, etc.)?".

[b] P values calculated using chi-square and 2-tailed Mann-Whitney U tests comparing Opioid reduction users (n = 1,144) and Other users of kratom (n = 1,654).

[c] Respondents could identify multiple reasons for use.

[d] SOWS scores can range from 0 to 64, with scores 0–10 = mild, 11–20 = moderate, > 20 = severe.

improved by including the abovementioned predictor variables (χ^2 = 2988.20, $p < .001$). Kratom use for opioid use reduction was significantly associated with age of first kratom use (aOR > 8.87×10^4 for starting use at age 65 or younger; 95 % CI: 0.00, 12.92×10^6), lifetime kratom use on < 100 occasions (aOR = 0.26; 95 % CI: 0.13, 0.52), frequency of current kratom use (χ^2 = 10.64, $p = .031$), never having experienced opioid withdrawal (aOR < 0.01; 95 % CI: 0.00, < 0.01), greater number of opioids used in the past 12-months (χ^2 = 644.46, $p < .001$), and past 12-month opioid use (aOR = 5.89; 95 % CI: 3.35, 10.39).

3.7. Comparison of kratom users by motivation for use

Tables 1 and 2 show between-groups comparisons of individuals who reported using kratom to reduce opioid use (n = 1,144), and those who reported using kratom for other reasons such as pain or depression (n = 1,654). These groups were similar in many respects including age, sex, relationship status, and geographic location (Table 1). However, groups differed significantly in education and employment status, with those using kratom for opioid use reduction showing lower rates of college or advanced degrees, fewer current students, and greater unemployment.

Those who used kratom to reduce opioid use were less likely to have used alcohol ($p < .001$), antidepressants ($p = .028$), and hallucinogens ($p = .014$), but more likely to have used tobacco ($p < .001$), opioids ($p < .001$), benzodiazepines ($p < .001$), and cocaine ($p = .002$) in the past year (Table 1). Individuals who used kratom to reduce opioid use reported significantly greater lifetime prevalence across a variety of medical diagnoses including back pain, depression, and panic attacks, with menopause being the only diagnosis more common among those using kratom for purposes other than opioid use reduction. Respondents who used kratom to reduce their opioid use also showed significantly higher rates of endorsing kratom use for anxiety, depression, post-traumatic stress, bipolar mood, and pain.

Those who reported using kratom for opioid use reduction exhibited greater likelihood of having used kratom in the 24 h prior to completing the survey, higher dose used per occasion, more doses used per day, greater frequency of use, and higher prevalence of kratom-related withdrawal symptoms (Table 2). Between-group differences in typical subjective effects of kratom were also observed, with opioid reduction users reporting significantly greater drug liking, good effects, alertness, and desire for kratom, and significantly less sleepiness. Those who reported using kratom for opioid reduction were slightly more likely to meet DSM-5 criteria for mild or moderate kratom-related SUD in the past year.

4. Discussion

The current study collected data on kratom user demographics, use patterns, and perceived therapeutic and adverse effects. Participants in the present study were predominantly White, middle-aged, female, with some college education, in a committed relationship, and employed. Physical and psychological health in the current sample was on average slightly below US general population means (Hays et al., 2009), though lifetime pain and depression diagnoses were highly prevalent among respondents. These findings are congruent with observed comorbidity between opioid use disorder, pain, and psychiatric conditions such as depression (Conway et al., 2006; Fischer et al., 2012). Interestingly, respondents who reported using kratom for opioid use reduction had a higher life-time prevalence of depression, but were less likely to use antidepressants than other respondents. It is possible that these individuals use kratom as an alternative to antidepressant medications, though this might also be related to lack of access to medical care, which was not explicitly probed in this survey and should be examined in future studies. Consistent with other recent research (Boyer et al., 2007; Coe et al., 2019; Grundmann, 2017; Henningfield et al., 2018; Smith and Lawson, 2017; Swogger et al., 2015), these data suggest individuals in the US are using kratom to self-treat medical conditions such as pain, depression, anxiety, and opioid withdrawal symptoms, and reporting robust effectiveness for these indications.

This study supports the results of previous studies (Coe et al., 2019; Grundmann, 2017; Smith and Lawson, 2017; Swogger et al., 2015) by suggesting that kratom has a relatively benign risk profile compared to typical opioids, with only a minority of respondents endorsing kratom-related adverse effects, withdrawal symptoms, or problematic use. Adverse effects reported here were most commonly rated as mild and lasted ≤1 day, and less than 1 % of the total sample found the effects of kratom to be severe enough to seek medical treatment. Adverse effects of kratom use were related to a number of demographic, health, and drug use variables including age, sex, education, income, depression, pain severity, and past 12-month alcohol and opioid use. Therefore, younger individuals or people with depression or more severe pain may experience more kratom-related adverse effects, potentially related to co-use with alcohol or other opioids. However, daily kratom users among the current sample were unlikely to meet criteria for a kratom-related SUD, or report substantial problems or concerns related to their kratom use. Logistic regression models additionally found that greater kratom-related SUD symptoms predicted negative effects of kratom use, kratom withdrawal, and seeking treatment for kratom use, but not kratom use for the purposes of opioid reduction. Thus, kratom may differ in important respects from typical opioids, and may have significant therapeutic potential in light of the present opioid crisis (Henningfield et al., 2018; Raffa et al., 2018).

The major limitation of this and other internet-based surveys of kratom users is the self-selected convenience sample queried. Because data were collected online, and recruitment was conducted through websites of interest to kratom users, the sample likely exhibits selection bias towards individuals who are younger, more affluent, and more positively inclined towards kratom. Therefore, these results may underrepresent individuals from lower socio-economic status backgrounds, older and less technologically-fluent people, and those with negative experiences using kratom (e.g., who discontinued use due to adverse effects and are no longer part of the kratom-using online community). Thus, adverse effects may be underestimated, and benefits overestimated. It was also impossible to distinguish medically prescribed from illicit use of opioid medications in the current dataset, representing another significant limitation of the present study.

Kratom is currently unscheduled in the US, although the US Drug Enforcement Administration and Food and Drug Administration have raised the possibility of Schedule I classification of kratom and its alkaloids, which would strongly deter research and pose a significant public health risk for individuals currently using kratom in place of other opioids (DEA, 2017; Henningfield et al., 2018; Prozialeck, 2016). The rationale for Schedule I classification includes 44 possible kratom-related deaths worldwide over the past decade, most of which are known to involve other substances and/or preexisting medical conditions (Henningfield et al., 2018). The current scope of kratom use in the US remains unknown, and only one controlled human laboratory study of kratom has been conducted to date (Trakulsrichai et al., 2015), highlighting a notable lack of empirical information about the epidemiology and pharmacological effects of kratom in humans. Nationally-representative epidemiological research is needed, along with controlled studies of the potential risks, benefits, medication interactions, and abuse liability of kratom in humans prior to any Scheduling action that may confer unintended, but deleterious, public health consequences. There is a high likelihood that banning kratom or its constituents would compel individuals who are presently using kratom for pain relief or opioid use reduction to return to using prescription or illicit opioids with a known risk of dependence and possible lethal overdose.

With nearly 49,000 opioid-related overdose deaths in the US in 2017, the current opioid epidemic has reached unprecedented levels (Ahmad et al., 2018). Prescription opioid use has increased more than 4-fold since 1999 (Frenk et al., 2015), comprising 245 million prescriptions for opioid medications in 2014 (Levy et al., 2015; Rudd et al., 2016), and contributing to almost half of current US opioid overdose deaths (Ahmad et al., 2018; Rudd et al., 2016). The majority of pharmaceutical opioids are prescribed for the management of acute pain. However, prescription opioid misuse, diversion, and use disorder represent rapidly growing public health concerns (Vowles et al., 2015), highlighting an urgent need for novel pain management options that are safer, and less addictive than current medications (Volkow and McLellan, 2016). If controlled research in humans finds that kratom exhibits analgesic effects with minimal abuse liability and risk of respiratory depression, this could provide a much-needed avenue towards the development of novel medications for pain management and potentially OUD. Thus, additional investigation of kratom and its alkaloids is both timely and promising, and may have critical public health ramifications in the midst of the current opioid crisis.

ABSTRACT

Background: Made as a tea, the Thai traditional drug "kratom" reportedly possesses pharmacological actions that include both a coca-like stimulant effect and opium-like depressant effect. Kratom has been used as a substitute for opium in physically-dependent subjects. The objective of this study was to evaluate the antinociception, somatic and physical dependence produced by kratom tea, and then assess if the tea ameliorated withdrawal in opioid physically-dependent subjects.

Methods: Lyophilized kratom tea (LKT) was evaluated in C57BL/6J and opioid receptor knockout mice after oral administration. Antinociceptive activity was measured in the 55 °C warm-water tail-withdrawal assay. Potential locomotor impairment, respiratory depression and locomotor hyperlocomotion, and place preference induced by oral LKT were assessed in the rotarod, Comprehensive Lab Animal Monitoring System, and conditioned place preference assays, respectively. Naloxone-precipitated withdrawal was used to determine potential physical dependence in mice repeatedly treated with saline or escalating doses of morphine or LKT, and LKT amelioration of morphine withdrawal. Data were analyzed using one- and two-way ANOVA.

Results: Oral administration of LKT resulted in dose-dependent antinociception (≥1 g/kg, p.o.) absent in mice lacking the mu-opioid receptor (MOR) and reduced in mice lacking the kappa-opioid receptor. These doses of LKT did not alter coordinated locomotion or induce conditioned place preference, and only briefly reduced respiration. Repeated administration of LKT did not produce physical dependence, but significantly decreased naloxone-precipitated withdrawal in morphine dependent mice.

1. Introduction

Agonists of the mu-opioid receptor (MOR) such as morphine are effective analgesics, but demonstrate adverse effects such as constipation, respiratory depression, physical dependence, and addiction (Li and Zhang, 2012). In 2018, these effects claimed an average of 130 lives daily in the United States from opioid overdose (CDC/NCHS, 2018).

Withdrawal symptoms in subjects physically-dependent on morphine are severe and include increased blood pressure and heart rate, pronounced diarrhea and vomiting, and dysphoria (Ballantyne and LaForge, 2007). The severity of these effects contibutes to the high rate of relapse in subjects abusing opioids (Kreek and Koob, 1998). Current pharmacological treatments for opioid withdrawal include substitution with the MOR agonist methadone or the multifunctional opioid/nociception-OFQ agonist, buprenorphine (Kreek et al., 2002). These therapeutics produce liabilities of abuse and physical dependence that complicates treatment for opioid dependence, highlighting an urgent need for improved therapeutics for pain and opioid withdrawal.

Case studies and surveys suggest a tea traditionally prepared from the fresh leaves of Mitragyna speciosa (Korth.) Havil., kratom, may transition physically-dependent individuals off opioids with fewer symptoms of withdrawal (Boyer et al., 2008; Swogger et al., 2015). Kratom tea is documented to decrease fatigue and treat other ailments such as pain, cough, and inflammation (Swogger et al., 2015; Warner et al., 2016). It is speculated that kratom effects are mediated by two of its constituents, mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine (approximately 66% and 1-2% of the plant's alkaloid content, respectively) (Kamble et al., 2019; Kruegel et al., 2019), both of which have shown affinity for, and agonistic effects at, the MOR (Takayama et al., 2002; Boyer et al., 2008; Hassan et al., 2013; Váradi et al., 2016).

Most kratom users partake of the natural product orally as a tea extract (Avery et al., 2018; Boyer et al., 2008). Despite this anecdotal use of kratom to treat pain and opioid withdrawal (Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020), few behavioral pharmacology studies have assessed the analgesic efficacy, liabilities, or the potential of kratom tea to treat opioid withdrawal under controlled conditions. The present study utilized mice to evaluate antinociception and liabilities of relevant doses of orally ingested lyophilized kratom tea (LKT), where the constituents were previously characterized (Sharma et al., 2019) and constant herein. Additionally, the therapeutic potential of LKT to prevent naloxone-precipitated withdrawal in mice physically-dependent on morphine was assessed.

2. Materials and Methods

Male C57BL/6J and gene-disrupted (knock-out, or KO) mice for the mu- (MOR), kappa- (KOR) or delta-opioid receptor (DOR) (20–35 g) were used (Jackson Laboratories, Bar Harbor, Maine, USA). Mice were housed five per cage on a 12:12 h light/dark cycle (lights off at 7 pm). Access to water and food was ad libitum. Animal studies are reported in compliance with the ARRIVE guidelines (Kilkenny et al., 2014). Sample sizes were approximated by Power analysis, with animals assigned to groups randomly and double blinded treatment groups. Animal studies were approved and conducted in agreement with the Institutional Animal Care and Use Committees at the Universities of Mississippi, Florida and in accordance to the National Institutes of Health guide for the care and use of Laboratory animals (NIH Publications No. 8023, revised 1978).

2.1. Chemicals

Dried leaves of Mitragyna speciosa (kratom) were purchased from Pure Land Ethnobotanicals in February of 2009 and authenticated by Dr. Rita Moraes from the National Center for Natural Products Research at the University of Mississippi. All other chemicals were obtained commercially from Sigma-Aldrich.

2.2. Preparation of Lyophilized Kratom Tea (LKT)

The plant material was prepared as previously described (Avery et al., 2018; Kamble et al., 2019). As reported previously, 200 g of the processed leaf material was added to a finum tea filter, and boiled in 2 L of water for 20 min. The filtered aqueous layer was evaporated to yield LKT. All LKT used were from the same preparation, analyzed for the content of 8 kratom alkaloids using an ultra-performance liquid chromatography tandem mass spectrometer (UPLC-MS/MS) method (see Table 1, reproduced from Sharma et al., 2019).

Corynantheidine	0.2
Isocorynantheidine	0.2

2.3. Dosing of LKT

The test dose of LKT used in the present mouse study was calculated using the FDA-recommended guidelines (listed as equation 1, below) from the normalized dose of mitragynine (56.7 mg) available in a glass of kratom juice consumed by the native kratom users from Malaysia (FDA, 2005; Singh et al., 2020). The correction factors (K_m) were derived from average body weight (kg) of species to its body surface area, with FDA recommended values of K_m as 37 and 3 used for human (60 kg) and mice (0.02 kg), respectively.

The calculated human equivalent dose of mitragynine in mice (MED) was 11.7 mg/kg. According to the quantitative analysis of LKT for mitragynine content (7.4 mg/g), 1.6 g/kg of LKT would be required to achieve the MED. The MED of LKT (rounded to 2 g/kg) as well as a dose equivalent to half of MED (1 g/kg) was thus used for the LKT characterization in most animal experiments.

2.4. Antinociceptive Characterization (55 °C Warm-Water Tail-Withdrawal Assay)

Mice were divided into 5 groups (n = 8, or 16 for KOR KO mice). The 55 °C warm-water tail-withdrawal assay was performed as previously described (Reilley et al., 2010). Latency to remove the tail from the water was the recorded end point. After measuring baseline responses, mice were administered either morphine (1-60 mg/kg, i.p. or p.o.), vehicle (saline (0.9%)) or LKT (45-4000 mg/kg, p.o.) and the tail withdrawal measured every 10 minutes until a return to baseline was recorded. Antinociception was calculated using the following formula:

% antinociception = 100 x ((test latency-baseline latency)/ (15-baseline latency))

Mice that failed to withdraw their tails within 15 seconds were assigned a maximum antinociceptive response (100%) to avoid tissue damage.

2.5. Respiratory Depression/Locomotor Activity Assessment

Locomotor activity and respiratory depression were assessed using the automated, closed-air Comprehensive Lab Animal Monitoring system (CLAMS) as previously described (Brice-Tutt et al., 2020; Cirino et al., 2019). Randomly grouped mice were habituated in individual chambers for 60 min, then administered morphine (30 mg/kg, p.o.), LKT (1 g/kg, p.o.) or vehicle. Animals moved freely inside the chambers for 3 hours, where respiration (breaths/minute) and ambulation (number of photobeam breaks) were counted.

2.6. Rotarod Assessment of Impaired Motor Activity/Sedation

Sedative or locomotor impairing effects of LKT were assessed as described previously using the computer-controlled rotarod apparatus (San Diego Instruments, San Diego, CA) (Brice-Tutt et al., 2020; Cirino et al., 2019). Mice were first habituated to the rotarod over seven trials, with the last trial serving as the baseline response. Habituated mice were administered saline (p.o.), U50,488 (10 mg/kg, i.p.), morphine (10 mg/kg, i.p.) or LKT (45 mg/kg or 1 g/kg, p.o.) 15 min prior to assessment in accelerated speed trials (180 s max. latency at 0-20 rpm) performed every 10 min from 0 min over a 60 min period for a total of 14 trials (seven habituation trials + seven drug trials). Decreased latencies to fall indicate impaired motor performance and possible sedation (Cirino et al., 2019).

2.7. Conditioned Place Preference (CPP)

An automated, balanced three-compartment place conditioning apparatus (San Diego Instruments, San Diego, CA) and 2-day counterbalanced conditioning design was used (Cirino et al., 2019; Eans et al., 2015). The amount of time subjects spent in each of three compartments was measured over a 30 min testing period. Each of the next two days, mice were administered vehicle (0.9% saline) and confined in a randomly assigned outer compartment: half of each group in the right and left chambers. Four hours later, mice were administered morphine (10 mg/kg, i.p.) or LKT (100 mg/kg or 1 g/kg, p.o.) and confined to the opposite compartment for 40 min.

2.8. Naloxone Precipitated Opioid Withdrawal Assay

Mice (n = 8-10 group) were placed into six groups (Table 2): saline (i.p.), morphine (10-75 mg/kg, i.p.), escalating doses of LKT (30-125 mg/kg, p.o.), 7-day morphine + LKT (acute), 4-day morphine + LKT (100 mg/kg), 4-day morphine + LKT taper dosing (100-40 mg/kg). Morphine (i.p.) and LKT (p.o.) was dosed daily at 9:00 A.M. and 7:00 P.M., as previously reported (Kamei and Ohsawa, 1997). A final single treatment of morphine or kratom was given on the final day of testing (see Table 2). Two hours post-injection on the last day of testing, the all mice were administered naloxone (10 mg/kg, s.c.) to induce opioid withdrawal symptoms.

Opioid withdrawal behaviors (see Supplemental Table 1) were quantified from mice placed in a 16 cm × 45 cm plexiglass cylinder for 15 min after naloxone administration using established methods (Fernandes et al., 1977; Shaw-Lutchman et al., 2002).

2.9. Statistical Analysis

All data were analyzed using Prism 8.0 software (GraphPad Software, La Jolla, California, USA). Normality and equal variance were confirmed statistically and justified using parametric analysis. Nonlinear or linear regression modeling was performed to analyze ED_{50} values (dose yielding 50% effect) along with 95% confidence intervals (C.I.) using each individual data point. CLAMS data is reported as the % of matching vehicle control responses. The rotarod data are expressed as the % change from baseline performance, using within subject controls. CPP data are reported as the difference in time spent in the drug- and vehicle paired compartments between pre-conditioning and post-conditioning responses. Weight was identified as the percent of weight change each day when compared to the baseline (or naïve weight) of each mouse. Significant differences in behavioral data were analyzed by ANOVA (one-way or two-way RM) as appropriate, with significant results further analyzed with Tukey's multiple comparisons post-hoc tests for significant pairwise comparisons within and between groups. Significance was $p \leq 0.05$.

3. Results

3.1. Lyophilized kratom tea-mediated antinociception in the 55°C warm-water tail-withdrawal assay

Morphine dose-dependently produced full antinociception with an ED_{50} (and 95% C.I.) value of 3.91 (2.92-5.17) mg/kg, i.p., and 4.67 (3.47-6.21) mg/kg, p.o. (Fig. 1A) that significantly differed from vehicle ($F_{(8,144)} = 4.99$, $p < 0.0001$; two-way RM ANOVA) up to 70 min after oral (per os, p.o.) administration of approximately the ED_{50} dose (5 mg/kg, p.o.; green triangles, Fig. 1B). LKT also demonstrated significant time and dose-dependent antinociception after oral administration ($F_{(62,490)} = 10.31$, $p < 0.0001$), but the ED_{50} value for LKT was not determined, as a full response was not observed within the doses tested (Fig. 1A). Fig. 1. Characterization of (A) dose– and (B) time-dependent antinociception of oral Lyophilized Kratom Tea (LKT) in the mouse 55 °C warm-water tail-withdrawal test. Latency to tail withdrawal was evaluated 30 min after administration of morphine (i.p. or p.o.) or LKT (p.o.) for evaluation of dose-response (A), or every 10 minutes post administration for evaluation of time course (B). Points represent the mean ± SEM of n = 8 mice. *$p < 0.05$ versus the pretreatment tail withdrawal response, Two-Way RM ANOVA, with Tukey's multiple comparisons post-hoc test.

peak response of antinociception from high doses of LKT (1 - 4 g/kg p.o.) from 30 to 50 min post-administration was equivalent to that produced by morphine (5 mg/kg, p.o.; Two-Way RM ANOVA w/Tukey's test, Fig. 1B), and the duration of significant LKT-mediated antinociception when given at 4 mg/kg, p.o. lasted as long as morphine (70 min; Fig. 1B).

Potential opioid receptor mediation of antinociception observed after oral dosing of LKT (1 g/kg, p.o.) was tested using mu- (MOR), kappa- (KOR), or delta-opioid receptor (DOR) knockout mice (KO) (Fig. 2). Compared to the response of wild-type mice, the antinociceptive activity was significantly decreased (factor: treatment; $F_{(4, 86)} = 16.7$, $p < 0.0001$; Two-way ANOVA) in the MOR KO animals ($p < 0.0001$, Tukey's test) and to a lesser extent KOR KO mice ($p = 0.006$, Tukey's test), but remained unaffected in DOR KO mice ($p = 0.15$, Tukey's test). Antinociception of LKT was abolished in MOR KO mice pretreated with the KOR-selective antagonist, nor-BNI (Fig. 2, rightmost bar), with a response significantly different from that of the WT mice ($p < 0.0001$, Tukey's test), but not from the baseline (untreated) response (1.29 ± 0.04 s vs 1.45 ± 0.07 s; $p > 0.99$; Tukey's test). Together, these results indicate that this dose of LKT-induced antinociception in mice occurs primarily through activation of the mu-opioid receptor, but with additional kappa-opioid receptor agonism as well.

3.2. Evaluation of potential liabilities of Lyophilized Kratom Tea

The effects of LKT on spontaneous locomotor activity and respiration rate were assessed in C57BL/6J mice following administration of LKT (1 g/kg, p.o.) using the Comprehensive Laboratory Animal Monitoring System (CLAMS; Fig. 3). Morphine (30 mg/kg, p.o.) or vehicle (saline, p.o.) were tested as positive and negative comparison controls, respectively. Morphine produced significant time-dependent increases in ambulation (factor: time x treatment, $F_{(16, 248)} = 9.26$, $p < 0.0001$, Two-way RM ANOVA; Fig. 3A) from 20-160 min ($p < 0.05$, Tukey's post-hoc test) and decreases in respiration rate (factor: time x treatment, $F_{(16, 248)} = 7.10$, $p < 0.0001$, Two-way RM ANOVA; Fig. 3B) up to 80 min ($p \leq 0.007$, Tukey post-hoc test). In contrast, LKT significantly increased ambulation from 60-160 min ($p = 0.002$, Tukey's test), but suppressed respiration only for the first 20 min ($p \leq 0.03$, Tukey's test). Both behavioral effects of LKT were significantly less than those of morphine at matching time points ($p \leq 0.03$, Tukey's test). Assessing opioid contributions, LKT (1 g/kg, p.o.) was further examined in MOR KO mice alone (green triangles, Fig. 3) or MOR KO mice pretreated 24 h with the KOR antagonist nor-BNI (10 mg/kg, i.p.; purple squares, Fig. 3). Compared to wild-type mice, LKT produced significant global reductions in ambulation (factor: time x treatment, $F_{(16, 248)} = 6.81$, $p < 0.0001$, Two-way RM ANOVA; Fig. 3A), suggesting opioid mediation of the limited LKT locomotor effects. Likewise, significant global differences were observed in respiration among these three groups (factor: time x treatment, $F_{(16, 248)} = 3.07$, $p < 0.0001$, Two-way RM ANOVA; Fig. 3B). Post-hoc analysis demonstrated no significant difference across time in respiration rate between LKT-treated wild-type and MOR KO mice ($p \geq 0.22$, Tukey's test), although MOR KO mice pretreated with nor-BNI displayed decreased respiration from wild-type at some intervals (†≤0.03; Tukey's test, Fig. 3B). However, the respiration rate of nor-BNI pretreated MOR KO mice administered LKT did not significantly differ from that of saline-treated control mice at any time point (factor: time x treatment, $F_{(8, 176)} = 0.20$, $p = 0.99$, Two-way RM ANOVA).

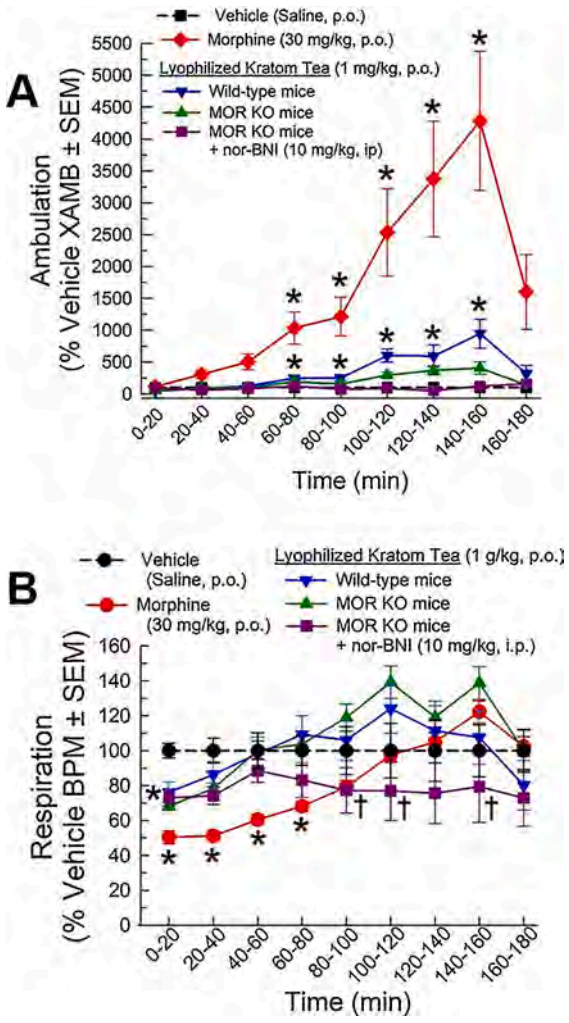

Fig. 3. Time-dependent effects of oral Lyophilized Kratom (LKT, 1 mg/kg) on (A) spontaneous locomotion (as ambulations) and (B) respiration rate were assessed in the Comprehensive Laboratory Animal Monitoring System (CLAMS) with wild type C57BL/6J mice and MOR KO mice. Morphine (30 mg/kg, p.o.) and saline (p.o.) are included as controls. * $p < 0.05$ versus saline control; † $p < 0.05$ versus the LKT wild-type group, Two-Way RM ANOVA with Tukey's multiple comparisons post-hoc test). n = 12-16/group.

The effect of LKT on evoked locomotor activity was further examined in the mouse rotarod assay. The KOR agonist U50,488 (10 mg/kg, i.p.) was used as a positive control, producing a significant decrease in latency to fall (factor: treatment, $F_{(4,37)} = 4.01$, $p = 0.009$ and factor: time, $F_{(4.84,179)} = 11.8$, $p < 0.0001$; each Two-way RM ANOVA w/Tukey's test; Fig. 4). Morphine (10 mg/kg, i.p.) produced a trend towards increased latency to fall, although this did not significantly differ from the response of vehicle-treated control mice at any time point. Likewise, LKT (45 mg/kg or 1 g/kg, p.o.) did not significantly alter locomotor responses compared to saline controls ($p = 0.63$ and $p = 0.35$, respectively).

Morphine (10 mg/kg, i.p.) produced significant conditioned place preference (CPP) ($F_{(1,126)} = 7.73$, $p = 0.006$; Two-way ANOVA w/ Tukey's post-hoc test; Fig. 5). In contrast, LKT (0.1 or 1 g/kg, p.o.) demonstrated no significant difference from pre-conditioning responses after place conditioning ($p = 0.60$ and 0.73, respectively; Tukey's test; Fig. 5). Collectively, these results indicate that while LKT possesses MOR agonist activity, it lacks some liabilities associated with clinically-used MOR agonists such as morphine.

Repeated treatment with escalating doses of morphine induced physical dependence, demonstrated by administration of naloxone (Table 3). Morphine produced significant increases in the frequency of jumping ($F_{(5,62)} = 20.2$, $p < 0.0001$; Fig. 6A) and teeth chattering ($F_{(5,62)} = 9.48$, $p < 0.0001$; both One-way ANOVA w/Tukey's test; Fig. 6B) compared to the saline control group. A significant reduction in rearing and forepaw licking frequency ($F_{(5,62)} = 9.53$, $p < 0.0001$ and $F_{(5,62)} = 6.18$, $p < 0.0001$, respectively) was demonstrated, confirming that this morphine treatment produced physical dependence and naloxone-precipitated withdrawal symptoms. In contrast, daily escalating dosing of LKT (30-125 mg/kg, po) followed by naloxone produced few significant withdrawal signs (reduced rearing behavior ($p = 0.005$)), confirming reduced LKT physical dependence.

The ability of LKT to attenuate naloxone-precipitated withdrawal in subjects physically-dependent on morphine was evaluated over three LKT treatment paradigms (as detailed in Table 2). While a single acute dose of LKT (40 mg/kg, po) significantly reduced jumping frequency ($p < 0.0001$; Table 3), acute dosing was unable to attenuate increased diarrhea ($F_{(5,62)} = 3.95$, $p = 0.011$), teeth chattering ($p = 0.015$), and decreased rearing ($p = 0.0004$) compared to the saline control group. Prolonged treatment over 4 days with LKT (100 mg/kg, p.o., twice daily) significantly ameliorated all subsequent symptoms of naloxone-precipitated opioid withdrawal (jumping frequency ($p < 0.0001$; Fig. 6A); teeth chattering ($p = 0.002$; Fig. 6B); rearing frequency ($p = 0.0003$); Table 3). Finally, tapering the doses of LKT given over 4 days (from 100 to 40 mg/kg, p.o., twice daily) still significantly reduced naloxone-precipitated measures of opioid withdrawal, just as effectively as the repeated high doses (jumping frequency ($p < 0.0001$; Fig. 6A) and teeth chattering ($p = 0.0006$; Fig. 6B; Table 3). Notably, higher doses of LKT and methadone were evaluated for innate physical dependence and efficacy against morphine dependent withdrawal symptoms with comparable effects (see supplemental data).

4. Discussion

Mitragyna speciosa (Korth.) Havil., called kratom, is anecdotally consumed both to treat pain and prevent opioid withdrawal (Hassan et al., 2020; Saref et al., 2019). Indications of rapidly increasing use prompted a warning from the U.S. FDA about the absence of scientific evidence supporting the application of kratom, and the potential for abuse liabilities (Anwar et al., 2016; O'Malley, 2018). While the upsurge of reports of kratom use has increased interest in the plant's active ingredients, there are few preclinical studies that evaluate the effects of consumption of whole, characterized plant material on pain and opioid withdrawal symptoms in a controlled manner.

The present study demonstrates characterized LKT (whole plant material) produced dose-dependent antinociception with reduced liabilities while ameliorating opioid withdrawal in physically-dependent subjects. Although clinical trials examining the potentially analgesic properties of kratom in a cold pressor task (Clinical Trials.gov, NCT03414099, 2018) and the pharmacokinetics of a well-characterized kratom product on opioid-metabolizing CYP2D6 and CYP3A4 activity (Clinical Trials.gov, NCT04392011, 2020) are underway, results are not yet available, and there exists a knowledge gap for controlled human studies with kratom. However, the current findings are generally consistent with a number of case studies and surveys of self-reported uses for kratom. For example, these results are consistent with Boyer et al. (2008), a published case study of individuals self-treating opioid addiction and withdrawal with tea brewed from the leaves of kratom. That uncontrolled study revealed that individuals self-medicating with kratom tea consumed approximately 1-4 grams per day. Doses of kratom tea studied presently were guided by the findings of Boyer et al. (2008) and reported pharmacokinetic studies (Avery et al., 2018). Consistent with present content (Sharma et al., 2019), kratom is reported to represent a botanical mixture of at least 40 alkaloids (Adkins et al., 2011). Mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine are reported to represent approximately 60% and 2% of the alkaloids extracted from kratom (Warner et al., 2016).

Consistent with another user survey, LKT produced antinociception with fewer liabilities than morphine (Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020). Existing literature reports attribute most effects of kratom tea and its main alkaloids to the activation of the mu-opioid receptor (Takayama et al., 2002; Hassan et al., 2013). Presently, LKT demonstrated dose- and time-dependent antinociception characteristic of partial agonism, but the reduction of LKT antinociception in KOR KO mice and abolition of antinociception in MOR KO mice treated with the KOR antagonist nor-BNI further suggest a modest KOR agonism. This is perhaps not surprising, given reports that kratom alkaloids display affinity for the kappa opioid receptor (Obeng et al., 2020). Notably, these results contrast with findings indicating that kratom's main alkaloid, mitragynine, displayed DOR-mediated antinociception (Prozialeck et al., 2012). Recent mitragynine-mediated thermal antinociception in rats was not blocked by naltrexone, and only occurred at higher doses that disrupted learned behavior, suggesting non-opioid mediation (Hiranita et al., 2019). The reduction of LKT-mediated antinociception by MOR KO mice confirms MOR mediation consistent with earlier reports with rodents finding mitragynine-induced antinociception to be antagonized by the opioid receptor antagonists naloxone or naltrindole (Shamima et al., 2012). Admittedly, doses that are considered low (1-5 g) in human consumption studies (Grewal et al., 1932) are also reported to interact with alpha-adrenergic and serotonin receptors that mediate analgesia (Matsumoto et al., 1996). Regardless, this study confirms that even low to medium doses of kratom tea possess analgesic effects. It should be noted that some of the antinociceptive effects of kratom may be attributed to mitragynine's metabolism to 7-hydroxymitragynine by CYP3A4 in the intestine and the liver (Kamble et al., 2019; Kruguel et al., 2019). Studies have indicated that analgesic effects of 7-hydroxymitragynine are 10-fold more potent than those of morphine (Hemby et al., 2018). While beyond the scope of the current study, future studies of the antinociceptive effects of the other individual constitutive components of kratom would be of mechanistic value.

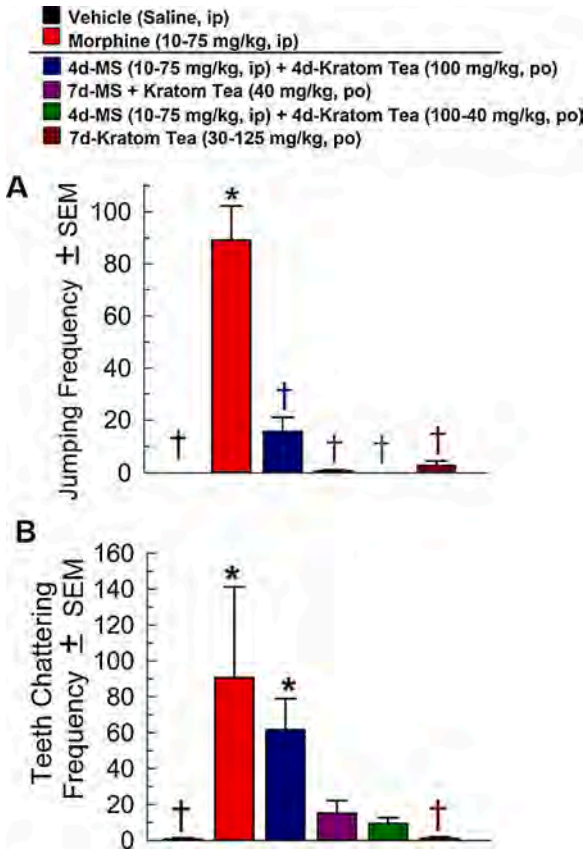

Fig. 6. Assessment of LKT's ability to produce direct treatment-induced physical dependence and reduce naloxone precipitated opioid withdrawal symptoms (i.e. jumping (A) and teeth chattering (B)) in morphine dependent mice. Vehicle (saline, i.p.), morphine (10-75 mg/kg, i.p.), MS (10-75 mg/kg, ip) + LKT (100 mg/kg, p.o.), morphine (10-80 mg/kg, i.p.) + an acute dose of LKT (40 mg/kg, p.o.), morphine (10-75 mg/kg, i.p.) + tapering doses of LKT (100-40 mg/kg, p.o.), and LKT (30-125 mg/kg, p.o.) were evaluated for opioid withdrawal symptoms after administration of naloxone (10 mg/kg, s.c.). * $p < 0.05$ versus vehicle control, One-way ANOVA with Tukey's multiple comparisons post-hoc test. n = 9-10 mice/treatment. †Mean and SEM lower than 1.

LKT (1 g/kg, p.o.) produced less hyperlocomotion and respiratory depression than might be expected of a MOR agonist such as morphine. The cause for this difference is not clear. Historically, case studies with kratom tea users report that low doses of the tea produced stimulant-like effects (Grewal, 1932), whereas doses above 5 grams of dried leaves reportedly produced effects similar to opioids (Prozialeck et al., 2012) and sedation (Boyer et al., 2008; Grewal, 1932). Increased locomotion is a characteristic sign of MOR activation in rodents (Zhang and Kong, 2017), as is respiratory depression mediated by activation of MOR on respiratory centers in the medulla (Martin, 1983). Of interest, LKT showed increased respiration in MOR KO mice. The nor-BNI data in this assay implicates KOR mediation of the increased respiration, as suggested by earlier reports (Dosaka-Akita et al., 1993). Even modest KOR agonist activity has been shown to offset the respiratory depression induced by MOR agonism in multifunctional opioid agonists (Brice-Tutt et al., 2020). Alternatively, the changes in respiration may be due to physical inactivity or non-opioid activity. Mice treated with LKT show no significant signs of inactivity in CLAMS-measured ambulations or in the rotarod assays, potentially discounting the involvement of physical inactivity. However, the individual alkaloid mitragynine has been reported to possess relevant non-opioid activity, activating dopamine-2 (D2) and serotonin receptors (Lydecker et al., 2016), both of which modulate respiration and which warrant future examination.

Previous studies established that MOR agonists such as morphine are rewarding (Ballantyne and LaForge, 2007; Kreek and Koob, 1998). Rewarding effects are attributed to the agonist-induced suppression of inhibitory interneurons, thereby indirectly increasing the activity of dopaminergic A10 neurons in the brain reward pathway (Matthes et al., 1996). With MOR-mediated antinociception, it might be expected that LKT would be rewarding. Instead, LKT produced no rewarding effects in a CPP assay. In previous studies, mitragynine itself was sufficient to decrease self-administration of MOR agonists (Hemby et al., 2018). The possibility of an underlying multifunctional interaction is further supported by report of mitragynine dose-dependent decreases in operant responding for food in rats that was not blocked by naltrexone, but was attributed to an interaction with alpha-2 adrenergic receptors (Hiranita et al., 2019). Supporting this, recent reports confirm kratom alkaloids possess micromolar affinity for the adrenergic receptors (Obeng et al., 2020).

Although clinical surveys suggest discontinuation of kratom by regular users may result in opioid withdrawal symptoms (Warner et al., 2016), repeated administration of LKT presently demonstrated less physical dependence than morphine. Compared to methadone, a significant reduction of withdrawal symptoms was observed with repeated oral dosing of LKT (1 g/kg, see supplemental data). LKT (2 g/kg, p.o.) showed increased withdrawal liability with a reduction of locomotor activity, increased wet dog shakes, and a reduced weight gain, but these were less than demonstrated with morphine-treated mice. Admittedly, studies of prolonged LKT exposure and at higher doses may demonstrate greater adverse effects (see supplement), but these results support the anecdotal claim that kratom produces less physical dependence than MOR agonists such as morphine.

Historically, treatments ameliorating opioid withdrawal syndrome reduce opioid cravings and withdrawal signs but suffer from limitations. Both methadone and buprenorphine possess partial mu agonism thought to prevent full agonist effects such as respiratory depression (McCambridge et al., 2007). However, treatment with buprenorphine is poorly tolerated by patients due to the precipitation of a withdrawal syndrome if used too soon after ingestion of opioid agonists (Hassan et al., 2020). Likewise, methadone treatment is sometimes not well tolerated and associated with increased physical dependence over time (Dart et al., 2005; Strang and Gossop, 1990). Alpha-2 adrenergic receptor agonists such as clonidine and lofexidine alleviate some autonomic symptoms of opioid withdrawal, attributed to the suppression of withdrawal-induced locus coeruleus hyperactivity (Gold et al., 1978; Hicks and Muvvala, 2018), However, these drugs are less effective in preventing some symptoms of opioid withdrawal, including insomnia, lethargy and muscle aches (Jasinski et al., 1985), are ineffective in minimizing opioid craving (Charney et al., 1986), and produce potentially dangerous anticholinergic effects such as hypotension (Jasinski et al., 1985). Given the drawbacks of current treatments, the need for alternative treatments persists.

A major finding of the current study was that orally administered LKT at doses up to 2 g/kg were able to significantly reduce naloxone-precipitated opioid withdrawal in morphine-dependent subjects. After repeated dosing with morphine, substitution with lower oral doses of LKT attenuated symptoms of physical naloxone-precipitated withdrawal, although in the higher doses there was a lack of rebounding in weight and increased tremors. This discrepancy could be due to the persistence of reduced appetite and increased tremor that were shown in the direct measure of physical dependence in subjects treated repeatedly with LKT, an effect also suggested in the literature (Singh et al., 2014). Acute dosing with LKT also significantly reduced some withdrawal symptoms, indicating that the acute use of low doses during the initial abstinence from chronic opioid abuse may have some therapeutic relevance. Janchawee et al. (2007) reported that oral doses (40 mg/kg) of kratom tea's main constituent, mitragynine, are quickly absorbed yet have a half-life of over 9 hours. If acting as a MOR agonist, it is possible the long half-life may simply provide prolonged competition from either antagonist-precipitated or spontaneous physical withdrawal. Alternatively, it is possible that kratom tea may be acting through non-opioid means such as alpha-2-adrenergic receptor activity to ameliorate opioid withdrawal. Supporting this, selected kratom alkaloids were recently reported to possess micromolar affinity for the adrenergic receptors (Obeng et al., 2020). The negative effects of alpha-2-adrenergic receptor agonists were not evaluated after LKT administration, although characteristic sedation was not observed. Overall, while more safety and mechanistic studies are needed, the present findings validate the clinical reports where consumption of kratom tea may offset opioid physical dependence.

4.1. Conclusion

Kratom tea induces antinociception predominately via mu opioid receptor agonism in mice. The optimal dose of kratom tea used in these studies did not induce respiratory depression or conditioned place preference. Moreover, acute doses of kratom tea as low as a single dose of 40 mg/kg (p.o.) effectively reduced withdrawal symptoms without sedation. While multifunctional pharmacological contributions of the individual major and minor components of Mitragyna speciosa (Korth.) Havil. to the overall effect of LKT remain to be investigated, this study suggests that kratom tea and/or the alkaloid components it contains could be prime candidates for the treatment of pain and opioid physical dependence.

Kratom (Mitragyna speciosa Korth., Rubiaceae) is a plant native to Southeast Asia, where it has been used for centuries as a mild stimulant and as medicine for various ailments. More recently, as kratom has gained popularity in the West, United States federal agencies have raised concerns over its safety leading to criminalization in some states and cities. Some of these safety concerns have echoed across media and broad-based health websites and, in the absence of clinical trials to test kratom's efficacy and safety, considerable confusion has arisen among healthcare providers. There is, however, a growing literature of peer-reviewed science that can inform healthcare providers so that they are better equipped to discuss kratom use with consumers and people considering kratom use within the context of their overall health and safety, while recognizing that neither kratom nor any of its constituent substances or metabolites have been approved as safe and effective for any disease. An especially important gap in safety-related science is the use of kratom in combination with physiologically active substances and medicines. With these caveats in mind we provide a comprehensive overview of the available science on kratom that has the potential to i clarity for healthcare providers and patients. We conclude by making recommendations for best practices in working with people who use kratom.

INTRODUCTION

Kratom (Mitragyna speciosa Korth., Rubiaceae; also known as ketum) is made from the leaves of a tropical tree in the coffee family indigenous to Southeast (SE) Asia, where it has been used for centuries as medicine for various ailments, including hypertension, diarrhea, cough, and fever (Tanguay, 2011; Cinosi et al., 2015; Singh et al., 2016). Despite such traditional medicinal use, it is important to recognize that neither kratom, nor its constituents (e.g., "alkaloids"), nor metabolites have been approved as safe and effective medicines for any therapeutic use. Nonetheless, widespread use for health and well-being include diverse uses reported by consumers as reasons for their use. For example, at low doses, kratom has long been consumed orally as a stimulant to enhance stamina and productivity, making it particularly popular among field laborers working long days in arduous conditions (Tanguay, 2011; Prozialeck et al., 2012; Hassan et al., 2013; Warner et al., 2016). Consumption remains widespread in kratom's native lands, where people commonly chew raw kratom leaves or boil leaves to make tea (Swogger and Walsh, 2018). Kratom can also be smoked, vaporized, or consumed as a powder. Because of its purported analgesic properties, kratom is used to treat pain and, notably, as a means to alleviate opioid withdrawal or as an opioid replacement among people with opioid use disorder (OUD) (Smith and Lawson, 2017; Henningfield et al., 2018; Bath et al., 2020). In addition to analgesia produced at higher doses, kratom is reported to have relaxing, anxiolytic effects. Over the past 2 decades, kratom has gained popularity beyond Asian borders, particularly in North America and Europe (Boyer et al., 2007; Grundmann, 2017).

An estimated 10–16 million people in the United States take kratom, though current prevalence ranges of 1.3%–6.1% from national representative surveys may underestimate regular kratom users (Henningfield et al., 2019; Covvey et al., 2020). Whereas in Southeast Asia users typically buy kratom leaves directly from a grower, Westerners often purchase capsules, powders, or extracts via the internet, specialty smoke shops, and gas stations (Prozialeck et al., 2012; Singh et al., 2016). Kratom is currently not recognized as a dietary supplement in the United States, and the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has not issued guidance or regulatory standards on kratom regarding allowable product contents, alkaloid concentrations, packaging, labeling, or marketing of kratom products that is usually provided for dietary ingredients (Coe et al., 2019). This gap in regulatory policy prompted the American Kratom Association (AKA) to develop voluntary industry guidelines through a Good Manufacturing Practice (GMP) Standards Program that tests for purity and contaminants (American Kratom Association, 2019). Due to the potential for adulteration of kratom products the unregulated status of kratom in most United States remains a concern.

Although the rise of kratom use in the West has been an opportunity for increased scientific study, the resultant publication of a great deal of research of limited rigor has created confusion for health practitioners attempting to understand the benefits and risks of the plant and the heterogeneity of kratom products. Case studies, poison control center briefings, and tallied coroner and medical examiners' reports have disproportionately emphasized, as these forms of inquiry often do, extreme and rare events, including seizure, liver damage, and death (e.g., Nelsen et al., 2010; Sheleg and Collins, 2011; Kapp et al., 2011; Neerman et al., 2013; Anwar et al., 2016; Wang and Walker, 2018; Post et al., 2019; Afzal et al., 2020), even as some have elucidated that adverse health outcomes from kratom exposure have been mild to moderate and resolved quickly (Anwar et al., 2016). Still, there remains considerable ambiguity on the potential harms from kratom use. In February 2018, the FDA cited 44 cases of kratom-associated deaths based upon coroner or forensic toxicologist reports. However, at the current level of scientific knowledge, several factors make it impossible to determine whether kratom contributed to lethal outcomes. Almost all of the cases cited involved adulterated kratom products and/or the co-ingestion of substances with fatal overdose potential, including heroin and synthetic opioids (Babin, 2018). For instance, nine deaths were from an herbal mix, Krypton, containing a metabolite of the opioid tramadol (Bäckstrom et al., 2010). Additionally, the mere presence of mitragynine (one of kratom's primary alkaloids believed to be responsible for analgesia) in decedents' plasma or evidence of presumed kratom consumption (e.g., kratom product packages) does not implicate the plant's role in toxicity, especially given the large variability of mitragynine serum levels of decedents, ranging from 5.6 to 29,000 ng/ml (Papsun et al., 2019). Finally, there is no clear mechanism by which kratom alone and taken even at high doses would directly cause death. Unlike classical opioids, which act as full agonists at mu opioid receptors, kratom's two primary and best understood bioactive alkaloids, mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine, act at mu opioid receptors as partial putatively "biased" agonists, meaning that they do not contribute to significant respiratory depression in pre-clinical animal studies (as discussed more below), making "poisoning", when kratom alone is used, a highly questionable cause of death. Importantly, there are no reports of deaths due to kratom use in SE Asia for over a century (Veltri and Grundmann, 2019). Despite insufficient evidence for kratom's role in harm, media headlines misleadingly insinuate that kratom has been established as a cause of death (e.g., "kratom deaths" and "kratom overdose deaths; " Galvin, 2019; Kaur, 2019; Miller, 2019).

Conclusions by many negative, sensationalized, or otherwise decontextualized media reports on kratom have been questionably drawn from case studies and toxicology reports which, at best, provide low levels of evidence due to unknown internal validity and generalizability and over-representation of extreme events (Merriam, 2009). Unfortunately, warnings regarding kratom exhibit features of drug hysteria (Hart, 2013), which involves the promulgation of sensational and biased information and the pursuit of legislative approaches that are disproportionate to apparent public health risks. At the public health level, drug hysteria is not only scientifically unfounded, but dangerous. In the case of kratom, misinformation can lead to dehumanization of kratom users, disinclination for people with OUD to try kratom as a substitute for opioids that are causing them harm, and the continued promotion of ineffective, draconian, and punitive policies with the potential to contribute to mass incarceration, a serious public health threat in its own right. Simultaneously, drug hysteria can contribute to the inhibition of rigorous scientific study and thereby deprive the public of scientifically-informed pharmacotherapeutic interventions (PR Newswire, 2016). Banning or criminalizing kratom, as six United States have done at the time of this writing, has the potential to create a new illicit market for kratom products, increasing the likelihood of adulteration and the use of dangerous substances as kratom substitutes. All of this results in harm to people who regularly use kratom to address pain, psychiatric problems, and SUD symptoms (Grundmann, 2017; Swogger and Walsh, 2018; Coe et al., 2019; Smith et al., 2021a; Smith et al., 2021b). Moreover, sensationalized and negative reports lead some patients to fear revealing kratom use to their healthcare providers (Smith et al., 2021b) and misinform those providers about the risks of kratom use.

Subsequent to increased kratom use in the United States, an eight-factor analysis (8 FA) normally required prior to scheduling decisions was performed by the FDA, and another by an independent agency (Pinney Associates). The former has been criticized by kratom researchers for omission of important scientific studies and pertinent data, as well as inappropriate use of a computer simulation model (PHASE) that provided data that the FDA used to deem kratom an "opioid" (Grundmann et al., 2018), linking it to more dangerous classical opioids without providing information on differences between kratom and these drugs. Meanwhile, Pinney Associates concluded that kratom is distinct from classical opioids and poses no more of a public health risk than many commonly-used substances, thereby warranting product oversight rather than a ban. Nonetheless, recent publications in medical journals espouse kratom use as "highly problematic" and its effects "contributors to the growing opioid crisis" (e.g., Goldin et al., 2019), without adequate supporting data. This rhetoric can stigmatize users and mislead well-intentioned healthcare professionals into an anti-kratom stance that could negatively impact their patients and the patient-provider relationship.

A balanced examination of what can be drawn from the existing literature directed to healthcare providers and clinicians is warranted. This is particularly true given that the study of kratom is in its infancy: there is only one published clinical trial of kratom's effects in humans. There is, however, a growing body of observational literature that represents a higher level of evidence than case reports or forensic toxicologists' and medical examiners' reports. Here, we first review research on the pharmacology of kratom and then summarize the available observational science on human kratom use in order to provide the most nuanced, accurate, and comprehensive review of kratom's potential benefits and risks possible at this early stage of kratom research. We acknowledge that information provided here will inevitably change as more data are collected on kratom and kratom use. Like all things in science, our understanding of this plant and its use is provisional. Here we provide the most up-to-date information in an accessible manner. Based on the review, we conclude with recommendations to health practitioners for conceptualizing kratom use and working with patients who use kratom.

PHARMACOLOGY AND ANIMAL STUDIES

Of the dozens of alkaloids identified in kratom, mitragynine is the most prominent (comprising approximately 60 percent; Hassan et al., 2013) and appears, along with 7-hydroxymitragynine, to be primarily responsible for the plant's unique psychoactive properties, which include opioid and non-opioid activities (Adkins et al., 2011; Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018; Raffa et al., 2018) that are dose dependent. In relatively low doses (<5 g), kratom has stimulant properties similar to its coffee relative, while larger quantities may produce sedating and analgesic effects (Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018; Coe et al., 2019; Kruegel et al., 2019; Todd et al., 2020). 7-hydroxymitragynine, while more potent than mitragynine, is unlikely to contribute to pharmacological effects due to its low natural presence in kratom leaves (Kruegel and Grundmann, 2018; Todd, et al., 2020; Obeng et al., 2021). Mitragynine is metabolized by humans via CYP enzymes into 7-hydroxymitragynine but the amount generated via metabolism is not sufficient to explain the analgesic effects of kratom products as a whole (Kamble et al., 2019; Maxwell et al., 2021).

In vitro studies reveal that biochemical pathways responsible for the analgesic and sedating effects of kratom do not carry risk of overdose comparable to classical opioids. Specifically, mitragynine and 7-hydroxymitragynine have partial affinity for the mu opioid receptor (Kapp et al., 2011; Prozialeck et al., 2012), whereas morphine is a full agonist. Binding of kratom alkaloids to this receptor largely activate G-protein coupled pathways, as opposed to the beta-arrestin pathway responsible for classical opioids' common deadly side effect of respiratory depression (Kruegel et al., 2016; Váradi et al., 2016; White, 2018; Kruegel et al., 2019; Basiliere and Kerrigan, 2020; Behnood-Rod et al., 2020). Mitragynine also exerts non-opioid receptor pain-relieving effects by stimulating alpha-2 adrenoceptors and inhibiting cyclooxygenase-2 messenger RNA (mRNA) and protein expression (Matsumoto et al., 1996).

The distinct affinity for and activation of opioid receptors, as well as non-opioid analgesic effects that clearly distinguish kratom from classical opioids (Raffa et al., 2018), may explain why there are relatively few kratom-related safety issues given its widespread use. It is likewise important to keep in mind that while many effects of kratom are mediated by opioid receptors, kratom's pharmacology indicates additional non-opioid mechanisms of action, including for mitragynine, again underscoring the complexity of the plant and our limited knowledge of its pharmacology (Hiranita et al., 2019). In addition to limitations in understanding the mechanisms of action and toxicity of kratom, is the limitation in data addressing use of kratom in combination with approved medicines, illicit drugs, and other herbal products. By way of example, the partial opioid agonist buprenorphine, which is approved by many regulatory agencies globally for the treatment of opioid withdrawal and use disorder, as well as pain, carries a far lower risk of lethal respiratory depression when used alone, but has been identified as contributing to overdose deaths when used in combination with benzodiazepines and other sedatives (Kumar et al., 2021). There has not been sufficient study to determine if kratom in combination with benzodiazepines and other sedatives, carries similar, greater, or lessor risks as compared to buprenorphine, so it would seem prudent for health care providers and kratom consumers to be aware of such limitations in the evidence and avoid such combinations and to minimize intake levels when combination consumption occurs because risks with most substances tend to be dose-related. The same cautions apply to use in combination with other substances.

The pharmacokinetics of mitragynine have been established in rodents, primarily rats, following oral administration (Ramachandram et al., 2019). Depending on the vehicle preparation, maximum plasma concentration, c_{max} (0.42–0.70 μg/ml), time to reach c_{max}, t_{max} (1.26–4.50 h), and elimination half-life, $t_{1/2}$, (3.85–9.43 h) indicated that mitragynine was highly variable in its absorption and/or metabolism. A study using traditionally prepared kratom tea and a hydroalcoholic kratom extract given orally to rats resulted in a c_{max} of 63.8 and 111.9 ng/ml and t_{max} of 1.3 and 3.1 h, respectively, while the $t_{1/2}$ was not determined (Kamble et al., 2021). This supports the conclusion that the absorption of mitragynine is influenced by the presence of other kratom leaf compounds. Only one human study to date evaluated the pharmacokinetics of mitragynine following oral administration of a traditionally prepared kratom tea in 10 male volunteers (Trakulsrichai et al., 2015). The pharmacokinetic parameters for mitragynine were an average t_{max} of 0.83 h, c_{max} ranging from 0.0185 to 0.105 μg/ml, and an average terminal $t_{1/2}$ of 23.2 h. The maximum plasma concentration depends largely on the dose administered and thus needs to be interpreted within that context. However, both the time to reach maximum plasma concentration and half-life are usually comparable, at least within the same species. Because there is only one human study reporting mitragynine pharmacokinetics and substantial variability was found in rat studies, it is too early to conclude how well animal data can predict mitragynine pharmacokinetics in humans. Furthermore, the kratom preparation may impact the absorption and pre-systemic metabolism of mitragynine and other active principles.

Animal research provides further evidence of kratom's relative safety compared to classical opioids. Studies aimed to establish lethal kratom doses have not induced any acute deaths with symptoms similar to morphine. Instead, at doses of mitragynine equivalent to hundreds or more times the typical human dose range, some animals died within days or weeks from a variety of causes unrelated to respiratory depression (Henningfield et al., 2018; Prozialeck et al., 2019; Henningfield et al., 2022). Kratom doses of up to 807 mg/kg in rats or 920 mg/kg in dogs did not indicate signs of toxicity (Macko et al., 1972). Animal studies evaluating reinforcing effects through intravenous self-administration reveal that, unlike morphine, mitragynine does not serve as a reinforcer in rats (Hemby et al., 2018; Yue et al., 2018) and therefore has lower abuse potential. Mitragynine was also found to reduce rodent morphine (Hemby et al., 2018) and heroin self-administration (Yue et al., 2018). See Henningfield et al. (2022) in this special issue for an update of many more studies related to the abuse potential of kratom. Furthermore, administration of 7-hydroxymitragynine takes the equivalent of 100 times more than what humans consume to display reinforcing effects (Hemby et al., 2018). Rodent studies also demonstrate that prodigious amounts of mitragynine (not ingestible at a human equivalent) may be needed to produce severe and sustained withdrawal effects that rival those produced by classical opioids (Harun et al., 2015; Henningfield et al., 2018). Rather, kratom has been found to attenuate opioid withdrawal symptoms in animals, albeit with its own milder withdrawal effects after cessation of long-term use (Hassan et al., 2013; Sabetghadam et al., 2013; Yusoff et al., 2016). Rodent studies confirm physical withdrawal from kratom that occurs after injection with the opioid inhibitor naloxone (e.g., Matsumoto et al., 2005), as well as with cessation of repeated mitragynine administration (Yusoff et al., 2016). Symptoms include somatic withdrawal within 12 h and increased anxiety, evident after 24 h. Across studies, dose-dependent indicators of both toxicity and withdrawal related to isolated kratom alkaloids have been found to resolve after discontinuation or a short duration of time has passed, respectively.

OBSERVATIONAL RESEARCH

Our current understanding of kratom's effects in humans are based primarily on observational studies, including those using surveys, online experience reports, and/or validated self-report measures. With the increasing popularity of kratom in the West, online surveys (assessing tens of thousands of kratom consumers) have been conducted by United States researchers revealing that unlike SE Asia, where kratom appears to be predominantly consumed by males, almost half of United States consumers are female. Also, a majority of Western consumers are middle-aged, middle-income, Caucasian, and college-educated with private insurance. Most discovered kratom through the Internet or social media, about 25% from an acquaintance/friend, and a mere 3% from a healthcare provider. Only approximately 40% informed their healthcare providers about their use (Grundmann, 2017). Generally, motives for use in the West mirror those in SE Asia and include improvements in health, well-being, and productivity. Survey respondents overwhelmingly indicate that regular kratom consumption produces desired effects, including relief of various symptoms such as pain or anxiety, allowing them to live functional lives and meet daily obligations (Grundmann, 2017; Coe et al., 2019; Smith et al., 2021b).

Energy and Focus

A longstanding use for kratom in SE Asia is to increase productivity. In a survey of over a million kratom users in this region, a primary motive was to enhance physical performance (Tanguay, 2011). This may explain why a preponderance of traditional consumers are male agricultural laborers. Chewing kratom leaves while working the fields has been embedded in the culture for centuries. A recent analysis of 293 male Malaysian daily consumers revealed their main reason for ingestion was to work longer hours with less fatigue and pain (Singh et al., 2014). In another survey of 136 kratom users (predominantly male) in Malaysia, most reported the motive of increased work capacity and enhanced energy. It appears that Westerners are also increasingly using kratom to improve occupational functioning, much like the common use of coffee. Three Western online surveys (over 16,000 respondents combined) revealed increased energy and improved focus as main reasons for kratom consumption (Grundmann, 2017; Pain News Network, 2017; Coe et al., 2019). Social media analyses of kratom users also found these self-reported motivations and benefits of kratom use (Smith et al., 2021b; Smith KE. et al., 2021). In fact, clinical, scientific, and ethnographic reports spanning from 1930 to 2017 consistently reveal kratom's role in enhancing, sustaining, or making it feasible to meet work demands (Henningfield et al., 2018).

Mood and Mental Health

A substantial portion of kratom users report using the plant to improve mood or manage symptoms associated with a mental health diagnosis. In the largest scale survey in SE Asia, many revealed using kratom to "feel better" and "cope with problems" (Tanguay, 2011). In a Western survey of 2,867 current and 157 former kratom users (Coe et al., 2019), 22% reported using kratom to alleviate symptoms of anxiety, post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), or depression. In another US-based survey of 8,049 users (Grundmann, 2017), 66% used kratom to treat emotional or mental conditions. Additionally, a survey of 6,150 kratom consumers by Pain News Network (2017) revealed 14.5% of respondents used kratom to treat anxiety, 8.83% to treat depression, and 1.40% to treat insomnia. The most recent survey of kratom users (n = 2,798; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020) indicated that depression and anxiety were the motivation for kratom use for 67% and 65%, respectively. A literature review of 13 peer-reviewed studies in SE Asia and the United States examining kratom use and mental health provided further support that many individuals use kratom as a mood enhancer or anxiolytic (Swogger and Walsh, 2018). Specifically, the stimulant effect at low doses reportedly acts as a mood booster, while higher doses induce relaxation that may alleviate anxiety. There is also preliminary evidence that kratom has empathogenic effects, leading the authors to hypothesize that kratom may enhance sociability beyond what would be accomplished with anxiety reduction alone (Swogger et al., 2015).

Pain Management

While kratom's longstanding medicinal use in SE Asia applies to a variety of ailments, alleviation of pain is among the most common. A study in which 562 kratom users were interviewed in Malaysia revealed pain relief as a main reason for consumption (Ahmad and Aziz, 2012). Results of large-scale United States online surveys reveal that pain relief is the most common reason for kratom use (Grundmann, 2017; Pain News Network, 2017; Coe et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020). The Pain News Network (2017) survey queried pain conditions that people were managing with kratom. The most common identified were back/spine pain, followed by acute pain from injury, fibromyalgia, migraine or headache, and rheumatoid arthritis. Other pain conditions people reported treating with kratom included multiple sclerosis, neuropathy, osteoarthritis, inflammatory bowel disease, lupus or other autoimmune diseases, complex regional pain syndrome, Ehlers-Danlos syndrome, trigeminal neuralgia, and cancer. Over 90% of the respondents indicated that kratom is "very effective" in treating their pain or medical condition, while approximately 7% reported it to be "somewhat effective" (Pain News Network, 2017). Adding to data from observational studies, results from a recent randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled trial indicated that kratom significantly increased acute pain tolerance, as measured in the laboratory using the cold-pressor task (see Brown et al., 2003), in a sample of 26 male kratom users. (Vicknasingam et al., 2020).

Harm Reduction

The value of substitution (replacing an undesirable substance with a less harmful one) is evidenced by cannabis as a successful substitute for alcohol, opioids, and cocaine (Bachhuber et al., 2014; Socías et al., 2017) or treating OUD by replacing opioids with high potential for dependence (e.g., heroin, oxycodone) with those with less potential for dependence (e.g., methadone or buprenorphine). Consistent with descriptions of kratom use in SE Asia dating back to the 19th century (Hassan et al., 2013), current research indicates that kratom is being successfully used as a harm-reduction method or self-treatment for opioid withdrawal, including as a short- or long-term opioid substitute (Ward et al., 2011; PinneyAssociates, 2016; Smith and Lawson, 2017; Smith et al., 2021b; Smith KE. et al., 2021). Notably, kratom has the advantage of being available to individuals who cannot access medical treatment due to barriers in the system or will not access it due to mistrust of health care professionals, thus providing a potential self-treatment for OUD to a wide swath of people who would otherwise receive none.

A convenience study sample of 136 kratom users (99% male; mean age = 38.7) in an area of Malaysia known for heavy kratom use revealed that 90% were using kratom as a substitute for opioids and 84% indicated that kratom helped with their opioid withdrawal symptoms (Vicknasingam et al., 2010). In another Malaysian survey (Singh et al., 2015) of 293 adult male regular kratom users (mostly manual laborers; mean age = 28), 15% indicated that they had used kratom in an effort to reduce or eliminate addictions to illicit substances (e.g., opioids, cannabis) and/or to ameliorate opioid withdrawal symptoms. Kratom has also been used in SE Asia as a substitute or self-treatment for amphetamines and alcohol (Vicknasingam, et al., 2010; Singh et al., 2021) and in the United States to self-treat alcohol dependence (Smith et al., 2021b). These self-report data converge with preliminary signals in the pharmacology literature suggesting the therapeutic potential of kratom alkaloids for harmful alcohol use (Gutridge et al., 2019; Gutridge et al., 2020).

In the West, five United States.-based internet surveys of over 20,000 kratom users, as well as over 20,000 comments to the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), and a survey of more than 500 people in treatment for opioid use disorder, indicate that many are using kratom as an alternative to opioids (Grundmann, 2017; Smith and Lawson, 2017; Henningfield et al., 2018; Coe et al., 2019; Garcia-Romeu et al., 2020). In one of those surveys (Grundmann, 2017), nearly half of 8,049 respondents indicated that kratom enabled them to reduce or discontinue the use of opioids. Ten percent of 3,017 respondents to another survey (Coe et al., 2019) were taking kratom to cut down on opioid use and/or relieve withdrawal. Of those using kratom in place of opioids, 90% indicated that it was helpful to relieve pain, reduce opioid use, and relieve withdrawal. An analysis of 170 kratom threads during a 12-month period (2004–2005) on a Western online pharmacy indicated that a vast majority purchased kratom to treat opioid withdrawal (Boyer et al., 2007). Furthermore, in a study of 161 respondents to a United States.-based internet forum, over 10% reported using kratom to successfully decrease or abstain from a substance that was unwanted or considered to be causing harm (Swogger et al., 2015). Similar social media analyses indicate that kratom use as an opioid substitute is widespread (Smith et al., 2021b; Smith KE. et al., 2021).

Use of kratom as an effective substitute is supported by preclinical research, which is of particular interest in light of the current United States opioid crisis of rising dependence rates, emergency room visits, and overdose deaths. A recent study by Saref et al. (2019) provided evidence of kratom's potential as a harm-reduction agent and Yue et al. (2018) found that rodents pre-treated with mitragynine self-administered less heroin. Using a convenience sample of 260 illicit drug users, Saref et al. (2020) found association was found between self-reported initiation of kratom and reduction in both the consumption of various illicit drugs and frequency of HIV risk behaviors related to sexual practice and injection drug use. These findings are promising, given that estimated calculations put morphine-like opioids at an overdose risk of a thousand or more times that of kratom (Henningfield et al., 2019).

Kratom as a substitute to opioids also has the potential to improve social, family and occupational outcomes and behavior (Swogger et al., 2015; Henningfield et al., 2018; Swogger and Walsh, 2018). Like coffee drinkers, regular kratom users often consume this herbal supplement as a beverage in the company of others, enhancing social connection. In contrast, long-term daily opioid use can lead to self-isolation since this drug, unlike kratom, is conducive to the quick intense euphoria attained through snorting, injecting, and inhaling (Henningfield et al., 2018). In fact, only 2% of 6,135 kratom-users in the Pain News Network (2017) online survey responded "yes" to the question "Can you get high from kratom?" In addition to survey data, thousands of public comments to DEA and FDA attested to the successful substitution of kratom for opioids (Prozialeck et al., 2019).

Adverse Kratom Effects and Kratom Withdrawal

Despite centuries of kratom use in SE Asia, there have been few reports of serious adverse events associated with its use, and kratom overdose has not been identified as a direct cause of death in fatalities coincident with kratom use (PinneyAssociates, 2016). Among a sample of 293 SE Asian dependent kratom users, none reported having to obtain medical treatment related to kratom use (Singh et al., 2014). Recent research in the West confirms that adverse effects appear to be rare and dose dependent. In Grundmann's (2017) survey of 8,049 kratom users, less than 1% sought medical or mental health treatment related to kratom consumption, similar to low rates of adverse effects or healthcare treatment utilization for kratom found by Garcia-Romeu et al. Dosages of at least 5 g and frequency of 22 or more times per week were more likely to be associated with side effects (occurring in approximately 20% of 3,024 respondents), which were primarily gastrointestinal in nature (nausea, constipation, etc.). Other reported side effects of kratom use include vomiting, drowsiness, irritability, agitation, headache, runny nose, watery eyes, weight loss, insomnia, dehydration, and excessive thirst (Vicknasingam et al., 2010; Adkins et al., 2011; Anwar et al., 2016; Lydecker et al., 2016; Singh et al., 2016; Grundmann, 2017). These predominantly self-managed side effects occurred in about 13% of 3,024 respondents in the Coe et al. (2019) survey.

Kratom tolerance, dependence, and withdrawal have been reported with daily and heavy use, though these symptoms are generally milder and of shorter duration than those of classical opioids (Ahmad and Aziz, 2012; Singh et al., 2014; Singh et al., 2015; Swogger et al., 2015; Grundmann, 2017; Swogger and Walsh, 2018; Smith et al., 2021b). Physical dependence that can develop over time has been described as similar to that of coffee or mild opioid dependence (Brown et al., 2017). A study on dependent users (three or more daily servings) indicated that withdrawal symptoms (including insomnia, nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, muscle pain or spasms, shakiness, runny eyes or nose, and hot flashes) resolved within one to 3 days for most (Singh et al., 2014). Longer duration of use and higher average dose may extend the duration and increase the severity of withdrawal, however, and a small number of individuals may find kratom very difficult to quit (Smith et al., 2021b).

Overall, there appears to be minimal, short-term risk to the majority of people using kratom with the intention of self-treating a variety of conditions. While these findings warrant validation in controlled clinical studies, they reveal that for many people, kratom enhances their health in ways they report as unachievable, or with fewer side effects, than by other means, including pharmaceuticals. For this reason, it is important that healthcare practitioners are prepared and willing to have conversations with their patients about the use of kratom products pending greater scientific understanding of this plant and experimental validation of its traditional and (growing) conventional uses.

BEST PRACTICES IN THE CLINICAL CARE OF PEOPLE WHO USE KRATOM

Up to 60% of patients turn to non-medical modalities for treatment (Alwhaibi et al., 2015) and over 30% use herbal-based remedies, especially for conditions involving chronic pain (Barnes et al., 2008; Pain News Network, 2017). Although the majority of kratom consumers do not reveal their use to healthcare providers (Grundmann, 2017; Coe et al., 2019), popular use of natural remedies is evident on "pharmacy watch" websites, such as drugs.com, that disseminate information regarding alternatives for pain management, including kratom (Boyer et al., 2007). Healthcare practitioners must therefore be knowledgeable about the implications of using these substances. Indeed, the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) advises that "people should check with their healthcare providers about the safety of mixing kratom with other medicines" (NIDA, 2019), suggesting that patients do turn to their providers for information. Meanwhile, providers and patients alike have been put in unnecessarily difficult positions as they attempt to sort out contradictions between United States government agency-fueled headlines (e.g., the CDC warning that kratom may cause psychosis or death; Anwar et al., 2016) and more reasonable interpretations of the existing scientific data on kratom. To aid in this process, and with the earlier stated caveats that kratom has not been approved as safe and effective for any medical disorder and we are not encouraging or endorsing such use, we offer best practices for assessing and treating people who use kratom, pending further study in controlled experiments.

Assessment

It is important to contextualize kratom assessment for the patient in a way that feels consistent with the non-judgmental and routine nature of a competent medical or mental health evaluation. Embedding questions about the use of "herbal medicines, like Valerian root or kratom" in an assessment of pharmaceuticals and supplements acknowledges kratom's place among other treatments that people choose to use. The stance is non-stigmatizing and respectful and may increase the likelihood of honest patient disclosure. Initiating a discussion with open-ended questions about patients' experiences with kratom, desired outcomes, and concerns enables practitioners to assess gaps in knowledge or false beliefs, areas for patient education. Moreover, apprehending patients' motivations for use also enables clinicians to provide education around other, FDA-approved treatments such as cognitive-behavioral therapy for anxiety and buprenorphine for opioid replacement. Kratom does not appear in standard drug screens (White, 2018). Regardless, we do not recommend routine screening for illicit substances without consideration of the potential impact on patient-provider trust, which may be necessary for honesty and positive outcomes.

Patient-Centered Conceptualization

It is helpful for providers to explicitly state that they are unable to recommend or condone the use of kratom or any substance that is not approved by the FDA, but that they can provide education and work to understand the patient's kratom use. The non-judgmental approach to assessment recommended above leads naturally to a conceptualization of kratom use within the context of individual patient values and goals. The evidence-based treatment process specifically highlights the need for clinical engagement and shared decision-making with patient values and goals inherent in that process (Gambrill, 2006; Melnyk et al., 2010; Hoffmann et al., 2014). Treatment around substance use that involves patient values has evidence for efficacy (Osaji et al., 2020). Someone who, for example, is unsuccessfully using kratom to self-treat anxiety may be surprised to learn that there are evidence-based psychotherapies (e.g., cognitive-behavioral therapy) that are effective for doing the same. Someone who is self-treating OUD may wish to switch to buprenorphine, or other medication-assisted therapy if they are unhappy with their response to kratom or wish to use an FDA-approved product. For people without histories of opioid dependence, however, switching from kratom to buprenorphine or methadone should be considered judiciously on a patient-by-patient basis. Assessment of patient values and goals can lead to rich, meaningful discussions of the potential risks and benefits of a number of treatments and can contribute to trust, and thus effectiveness, in the clinician-provider relationship.

Understand Patient Motives for Use

With the explicit acknowledgment that data from randomized controlled trials is lacking, the available data reviewed above indicate that people across the world consistently report that kratom is useful for increasing energy, improving mood and alleviating anxiety, and for decreasing and/or ceasing opioid use and alleviating related withdrawal symptoms. Some people have reported that kratom has been a helpful substitute for other substances that are causing harm (e.g., alcohol). Finally, the observational literature indicates that people consistently report the utility of kratom for pain relief, and this is corroborated by the only clinical trial to examine kratom and analgesia in humans.

Dosing

The literature on dosing is consistent, but imprecise. In general, lower doses up to approximately 5 g of raw plant material are reported to exert stimulant effects and have been compared to caffeine. Doses between approximately 5 and 15 g are reported to lead to relaxation and analgesic effects. These higher doses may be necessary for successful opioid substitution. Side effects are more likely at higher doses. Limited data show that there is variability in terms of lowest and highest perceived dose as being ineffective or effective, and that feelings of discomfort may arise from higher doses (Smith et al.). Although no dose or dosing range can be clinically recommended, but patients can be informed that some average doses are approximately 2.5 g (Smith et al.). The development of kratom dependence, including tolerance and withdrawal symptoms upon cessation or reduction, is more likely at higher doses and with frequent, recurring use. For this reason, patients should be encouraged to use as little as needed for therapeutic effects. People who have decided to initiate kratom use should begin with a minute amount to test for adverse reactions before slowly increasing. It is important to convey that the potency of the plant can vary based on factors such as geographical source, the season, age of the sample, and post-harvest handling (Adkins et al., 2011; Griffin and Webb, 2018; Pearson et al., 2018; Zhang et al., 2020), as well as strain, which is commonly referred to as vein type (red, green, or white) and likely corresponds to the age of the leaf. Evidence suggests that the red vein variety may be more potent than the older, green vein (Braley and Hondrogiannis, 2020). Patients should be advised to purchase kratom from the same manufacturer to be as consistent as possible in the product (see further discussion below).

Duration of Action

Generally, the effects of kratom last for approximately five to 7 hours, with the strongest effect within two to 4 hours of ingestion, though aftereffects (e.g., fatigue) can be felt as late as the following day (Maruyama et al., 2009; Prozialeck et al., 2012; Rosenbaum et al., 2012; Scott et al., 2014). One should not assume, however, that effects of kratom will not "kick in" sooner, especially if taken on an empty stomach, or last longer due to individual variation.

Side Effects and Adverse Effects

Unwanted effects associated with kratom use have been systematically studied. Large scale surveys and other observational studies of tens of thousands of users reveal that a minority experience dose-dependent side effects that are mostly mild and self-resolve. The most common of these are constipation, nausea, vomiting, other stomach irritation, and drowsiness (Grundmann, 2017; Swogger and Walsh, 2018). Dizziness and sedation are possible, so patients should avoid driving or any other activities one would avoid after drinking alcohol. Adverse effects, while rare, cannot be ruled out. These include the potential for liver problems, seizures, and dependence (discussed below). Individuals with compromised liver, kidney, or cardiac function may be at increased risk for harm (Harizal et al., 2010). While a recent study found no QTc interval prolongation differences between kratom users and controls (Leong Abdullah et al., 2021), it is worth noting that a small number of cases allude to this possibility and cardiotoxicity in humans cannot be ruled out (see Lu et al., 2014). Clinical trials may reveal additional long-term and/or rare side effects and adverse effects.

Kratom-Drug Interactions

As discussed earlier, it is important to note the possibility of risky drug interactions between kratom and alcohol, opioids, and benzodiazepines for instance, which may induce respiratory depression, as well as use in combination with stimulants because kratom also as stimulant effects. In the absence of evidence of more detailed safety data, there should be the presumption of some level of risk of kratom use in combination with other pharmacologically active substances and that such risks are more likely to be increased by higher levels of consumption. Thus, patients taking kratom should be made aware that interaction effects with other substances have not been studied. It is therefore highly advisable to refrain from mixing kratom with other substances including herbal products. Additionally, mitragynine's observed mechanisms of action can guide warnings issued to kratom consumers taking certain medications. The alkaloid's stimulation of postsynaptic alpha-2 adrenergic receptors (Prozialeck et al., 2012) suggests that it can accentuate and therefore be dangerous with other sedative, hypnotic, and analgesic drugs (White, 2018). Additionally, a recent in vitro study revealed the possibility that kratom ingestion mixed with drugs that are P-gp substrates (e.g., erythromycin, loperamide, protease inhibitors) could lead to clinically significant toxicity (Rusli et al., 2019). Finally, there is evidence that kratom cytochrome P450 enzyme activities, thus raising the possibility of herb-drug interactions when administered along with agents that use the same metabolic pathway (Hanapi et al., 2013).

Dependence

Kratom dependence occurs for a minority of users, especially at high doses with frequent dosing. Individuals with substance dependence histories who are considering initiating kratom use should be informed that their risk of dependence is theoretically higher than for people who have never had harmful substance use. Solid therapeutic relationships enable patients to be honest about their kratom use, allowing for close monitoring of increased signs of dependence (e.g., tolerance, cravings, and withdrawal symptoms upon cessation). Patients looking to decrease or discontinue kratom use can be assured that this is often done without medical intervention (Saingam et al., 2016) and that a gradual taper is recommended. Mild withdrawal effects occur in some people and usually resolve within days. These may include physical symptoms (muscle spasms or soreness, diarrhea, muscle aches, lack of appetite, fever, and runny eyes and nose) and psychological symptoms (mood swings, irritability, nervousness restlessness, disturbed sleep, tension and sadness; Singh et al., 2014). Some people who have ceased use report substituting coffee or energy drinks to help with withdrawal symptoms (Saingam et al., 2016). Patients should be encouraged to call their provider if concerns arise regarding the severity or duration of their withdrawal symptoms, as more severe and long-lasting withdrawal has been reported. In such cases, initiation of an opioid substitute (e.g., buprenorphine) and/or supportive psychotherapy may be beneficial. Patients who experience more severe withdrawal symptoms should be cautioned against making important decisions until they are feeling better and should be encouraged to contact their provider if they begin having thoughts of suicide due to mood changes occurring during the withdrawal process.

Additional Considerations

In order to purchase kratom that is of consistent potency and is unadulterated, patients should be informed that vendors who use Good Manufacturing Practices (GMP) are identifiable. It is also potentially helpful to inform patients about whether they risk arrest for use of kratom in a particular jurisdiction (see Table 1). Finally, it may be helpful to clarify that FDA non-approval of kratom as a treatment, despite the significant observational evidence for utility, reflects the fact that clinical trials to substantiate users' reported effects have yet to be conducted. In conclusion, we present here the most up-to-date information regarding kratom to inform healthcare providers with the necessary data to have honest and straightforward discussions with their patients concerning kratom use, which is currently on the rise in the United States, and could have important health ramifications.

Use of Kratom in the Substance Abuse Community – How Barriers Impede Quality Outcomes that Would Reduce Suffering and Save Lives

John Shinholser
President/Co-Founder
The McShin Foundation

BACKGROUND

The traditional approach to substance abuse disorders and the common co-occurring disorders (COD) has relied heavily on observational research on patient outcomes associated with treatment in both outpatient and residential settings. The complexities of patient abuse behaviors has led to multiple treatment models, from treatment intensive outpatient settings to therapeutic community residential stays of between 6 and 12 months.

The common denominator in these treatment models involves an initial detoxification where the acute and potentially dangerous physiological effects of stopping drug use are managed and that typically is followed by referral to a drug addiction treatment program. The detoxification often involves unpleasant and potentially fatal side effects associated with withdrawal that are managed by a physician (in either an outpatient or inpatient setting). Medications assist in the withdrawal from opioids, benzodiazepines, alcohol, nicotine, barbituates, and other sedatives.

It is common in the recovery population for patients to substitute one form of treatment, or the medications they are prescribed, for another in the course of their treatment and recovery. In many cases these substances produce changes in brain structure and function that both promote and sustain addiction and are often linked to relapses. The fact is substance use disorders are chronic illinesses that produce clinically significant impairments in health, social function, and the capacity to control substance use. Affected individuals often have difficulty in complying with prescribed treatments and MAT providers often facilitate changes in approaches and medications to match the needs and adherence behaviors of patients.

Medicated-Assisted Treatment (MAT) programs have become a substantial business involving the use of FDA-approved medications, in combination with counseling and behavioral therapies, to provide what is known as a “whole-patient” approach to the treatment of substance use disorders, including opioids, alcohol, and smoking. MAT for opioid addiction is subject to an array of federal legislative mandates and regulations with robust government funding allocations to combat the scourge of addiction and its societal costs. According to the HHS Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) there are more than 2 million people in the United States who suffer from an opioid use disorder[i] that included heroin and prescription opioids such as oxycodone and hydrocodone.

The costs of these programs are staggering, with 2019 State Opioid Response (SOR) grants alone totaling $1.4 billion[ii] with the bulk of those funds allocated to MAT programs. This funding focuses on using three FDA approved medications for opioid use disorder (OUD) programs which are characterized as the “gold-standard” for treatments. It is not surprising that the addiction community resists any alternative treatment, particularly any non-drug product being used to wean off of opioids or replace them entirely without the associated withdrawal programs and costs.

I have personally observed the evolution of the treatment modalities for substance abuse disorders as an addiction professional for the past 38 years, and personally experienced the process as an addict currently in recovery, clean and sober. I have observed first-hand the biases embedded in the addiction treatment community on any potential new options for patients, and was a skeptic myself when initial reports were made on the natural plant kratom being effective in reducing drug cravings and in pain mitigation.

Over the past 7 years, I have personally observed over a thousand kratom consumers reporting routine recreational use (similar to using coffee for an energy boost or to increase focus), as a home remedy for pain related symptoms, and as a diversion product from drugs with dangerous safety profiles with known dangerous side effects. Among those using kratom as a diversion from illicit or prescribed pain medications, a large percentage of those addiction cases involved the use of mood-altering prescription medications.

I have personally witnessed hundreds of substance abuse patients use kratom responsibly as a supplement to ease craving symptoms, both physical and psychological, to reduce reliance on more highly addictive and potentially deadly medications. Among those I have personally observed, dozens of individuals used kratom for chonic pain symptoms to successfully reduce use of more dangerous drugs, or eliminate reliance on those drugs altogether. My observations mirror the conclusions of the study conducted by Johns Hopkins reseacher Albert Garcia-Romeu and his colleagues that was published in January 2020 in Drug and Alcohol Dependence where they reported that 41% of their study respondents has used kratom to stop or reduce prescription or illicit opioid use, and that 87% of those reported relief from withdrawal symptoms and 35% reported they had a >1 year abstinence from opioids attributed to kratom use.[iii]

A survey of 30 kratom users seeking to relieve pain associated with opiate withdrawal resulted in 29 participants were pain free within 5 days and had stopped using opiates entirely (the lone non-completion participant left the study prior to its end date). This kind of data should have been the catalyst for MAT providers to reexamine their treatment protocols, but a variety of federal regulations and guidelines literally prevent MAT providers from using any substances that are not on the list of FDA approved drugs authorized for reimbursement in these treatment programs.

In addition, numerous individuals suffering from acute and chronic pain have reported kratom effectively mitigates their pain and allows them to reduce or stop using medications with a much higher safety profile. It has been my experience in recovery programs that many individuals who are in early recovery from substance use disorders have found kratom to facilitate an easier recovery process than those who are being treated with prescribed medications.

It is a common practice for those in the recovery population to substitute one product for another in an attempt to mitigate withdrawal symptoms, and a growing number of this population report they have responsibly used kratom and experienced a far easier recovery process than those using the approved prescribed medications in the MAT programs. It is counter-intuitive that federal mandates on MAT programs would be restricted from using kratom when it could reduce patient reliance on dangerous prescription medications, shorten recovery periods, potentially eliminate use of more harmful medications, and even save lives of those who die in the current approved treatment regimen.

CONCLUSIONS

The FDA has unfairly demonized and stigmatized kratom so that it is not currently approved for use in federally-regulated MAT programs, and that impacts the treatment approaches of private providers. These barriers to access and those regulatory limitations prevent substance abuse programs from providing the optimal treatment to those individuals who would benefit from access to kratom use. Kratom should be added as a supplement option to first line addiction recovery treatment regimens to allow patient access to a safer option to prescription medications and to reduce the withdrawal effects and time required to successfully treat addictions in traditional treatment programs.

Our first duty as substance abuse and treatment professionals should be to provide access to treatment programs that best serve the interests of patients, including reducing the use of more dangerous drugs and therapies when appropriate. Resesarch funded by the National Institutes on Drug Abuse (NIDA) showing the kratom is not dangerously addictive, and the safety data showing that adverse events and deaths associated with kratom use are actually the result of polydrug use or ingesting adulterated kratom with fentynal, heroin, or morphine all persuasively argue for a new approach by SAMHSA to include kratom as an approved treatment option supervised in MAT programs. The number of individuals who were trapped in opioid addictions and found kratom to be the pathway to reduce or eliminate opioid use is powerful evidence that kratom is part of the solution, and not the problem. If kratom saved only one life, that would be enough. But based on the reports of kratom users who have successfully used kratom to escape addictions, it clearly has saved many lives.

Kratom needs to be freed from the bias of the FDA against all non-drug substances used to manage acute and chronic pain; the special interest anti-kratom hysteria driven in part by fears of financial losses; and kratom should be allowed to take its place as a legitimate player in the substance abuse treatment community.

Also, under John's guidance McShin won the national SAMHSA (Substance Abuse and Mental Health Service Administration) Recovery Month 2011 Flicker Award. McShin also won the SAMHSA special event of the year award in 2014. McShin Foundation is one of only 19 nationally CAPRSS accredited RCO's.

John Shinholser served as President of the SAARA (substance abuse and addiction recovery alliance) of Central Virginia Affiliate and is a former board member of SAARA of Virginia (2001-2005). Shinholser also served on the board of directors of Rubicon, Inc. for fourteen years the last two as Chairman of the board (1999-2013), Virginia's most comprehensive substance abuse treatment facility (230 beds).

THE SECRETARY OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20201

March 16, 2022

The Honorable Michael S. Lee
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Mark Pocan
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Senator Lee and Representative Pocan:

Thank you for your letter about the substance Mitragyna speciosa, commonly known as kratom. As your letter notes, efforts to schedule kratom within the United States have not moved forward, and the World Health Organization (WHO) Expert Committee on Drug Dependence concluded that there was insufficient evidence to recommend a critical review of kratom. This means that WHO will take no further action to control kratom under the 1961 or 1971 Conventions at this time.

Your letter also noted that there is emerging science suggesting kratom may have therapeutic health benefits. The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) is also aware of the emerging research and recent reports indicating that many individuals may be using kratom to self-treat serious health conditions, including, but not limited to, self-medication for managing pain, mental illness, and a substance use disorder. Additionally, there are reports that kratom is used for recreational purposes. Based on the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration's National Survey on Drug Use and Health, it is estimated that over 2 million Americans 12 years and older used kratom in 2020. However, the prevalence of kratom use is difficult to estimate, and the reason for this prevalence remains unclear.

To that end, HHS and its component agencies are working to address knowledge gaps through research. Both the National Institutes of Health and the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) are supporting studies on the pharmacology of kratom's constituents, their toxicity and addictive liability, as well as their potential therapeutic benefits for pain and substance use disorder. While there are no FDA-approved uses for kratom, the Agency has a proven drug review process involving the evaluation of scientific research and data from rigorous controlled clinical trials to assess the risks and benefits of drugs. This includes a well-developed process for evaluating therapeutic uses of botanical drug products. FDA has also issued guidance on the proper development of botanical drug products[1] and has a team of medical reviewers who can provide scientific expertise on botanical issues for researchers developing drugs made from plants.

To your final point regarding kratom safety and consumer protections, I agree with your concerns. Indeed, FDA continues to receive concerning reports describing safety concerns associated with kratom, including death. Many kratom-involved overdose deaths have occurred after use of adulterated kratom products or taking kratom with other substances.

While options for scheduling have been discussed, we believe that additional data and information are needed to understand the public health impact of kratom in terms of therapeutic benefits as well as safety risk. Discussions continue within HHS on mitigating actions to best address the various public health concerns presented, including potential unintended consequences that may arise from transitioning to riskier alternatives (for example fentanyl) if kratom were to be scheduled.

Thank you again for contacting me regarding this matter. Should you have further questions, please have your staff contact the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Legislation at (202) 690-7627

Sincerely,

Xavier Becerra

REGIONAL MEDICAL EXAMINER'S OFFICE

July 2, 2020

J. David Wuest R.Ph.
Executive Secretary
Nevada State Board of Pharmacy
85 Damonte Ranch Pkwy Ste 206
Reno, NV 89521

Re: Potential Nevada Board of Pharmacy Action to Schedule Mitragynine (Kratom)

Dear Executive Secretary Wuest,

As Chief Medical Examiner and Coroner at the Washoe County Regional Medical Examiner's Office, I provide autopsy and death investigation services for Washoe County, as well as autopsy services to an additional 19 counties in Northern Nevada and Northern California. I also review fatalities as a member of the Washoe County Child Fatality Review Team, the Nevada Maternal Mortality Review Committee, and serve as a consulting subject matter expert for the State of Nevada Committee to Review Suicide Fatalities. My Curriculum Vitae is attached.

I write to you today to express my concern regarding the danger of the currently unregulated and unscheduled drug mitragynine to Nevada residents. This plant-derived alkaloid compound also known as Kratom has historically been utilized in Southeast Asia for its stimulant-like effects at lower doses and opioid-like effects at higher doses. The drug has found its way to the western world, including Nevada, and apparently can be obtained with ease in concentrated extract form via the internet by its users.

Despite the lack of clinical research to determine the safety and efficacy of mitragynine, its use has become more widespread, and the number of mitragynine-related fatalities in Northern Nevada has increased alarmingly over the past 4 years after being first seen in 2015. In an abstract[1] recently submitted for presentation at the October 2020 Annual Scientific Meeting of the National Association of Medical Examiners, my co-authors and I describe 35 deaths from 2015 to Spring 2020 in Northern Nevada in which mitragynine was detected and quantitated in postmortem blood. In 28 of the cases mitragynine was a contributing or causal factor in the death. In one case, mitragynine was the sole intoxicant present and it alone caused the death, with a high postmortem blood concentration of 950 ng/mL. Furthermore, following submission of our study, additional mitragynine-related deaths have occurred in our region, including one particularly alarming case in which mitragynine was detected in the blood of a deceased infant who had been breastfed by a mitragynine-abusing mother; mitragynine toxicity was a contributing factor in the death, as the infant most likely died of asphyxia and the central nervous depressant drug may have contributed to hypoxia through respiratory depression.

To date in the Northern Nevada deaths observed, mitragynine is most frequently observed in combination with other opioid and depressant drugs, both prescription and illicit. The combination with illicit drugs in particular suggests mitragynine is being used recreationally, as a drug of abuse, rather than in any therapeutic fashion. Its safety and efficacy have not been assessed, and the potency of the alkaloid in various plant extracts and powders is likely highly variable. Mitragynine (Kratom) presents a danger to Nevadans and should be designated schedule I, having no currently accepted medical use and a high potential for abuse.

Sincerely,

Laura D. Knight, MD

Dear Mr. Wuest:

The Nevada Statewide Coalition Partnership (NSCP) is submitting this letter as public comment to the Board of Pharmacy public hearing to be held July 16, 2020. This public comment specifically addresses support of the scheduling of Kratom in Nevada.

When Kratom first appeared in retail establishments, there was confusion as to what this product was and the effects of its use. Coalitions across the state researched the origins of this product, how consumers were using it, the effects of usage by consumers, and the impacts of potential abuse. Recently, there has been a surge in the marketing of Kratom, resulting in increased abuse of the product.

Kratom can act as a stimulant or depressant, depending on the quantity taken, but is most often used to feel the same affects as heroin. The ease of access, challenges with drug testing, and false marketing claims make this product attractive to consumers, leading to over usage of the product and addiction. Scheduling Kratom would alleviate the misconceptions about this product and deter retail establishments from marketing it as an herbal supplement with no harmful effects.

In closing, the substance misuse prevention coalitions that are members of the Nevada Statewide Coalition Partnership, respectfully ask that you consider the harm this product produces and schedule this product.

Sincerely,

Linda Lang
Director

Dear Mr. Wuest and Nevada State Board of Pharmacy,

As Youth Program Coordinator of Partnership Carson City, Carson City's Substance Abuse Prevention and Education Coalition, I am writing to you to inform you of Partnership Carson City's (PCC) support to schedule the Kratom (Mitragyna speciose).

For nearly 10 years PCC has worked with local law enforcement, the Carson City Sheriff's Office, and retailers to educate on the risks of Kratom. Educational opportunities include training retailers on ID checking through Responsible Beverage and Purchasing Training, behind the counter placement to minimize theft by underage individuals and provide information on the substance itself to ensure understanding of Kratom all while encouraging the retailer to not sell the products. While our efforts persist, Carson City continues to see Kratom on its shelves.

In my role as Youth Program Coordinator, I work directly with the youth population of Carson City and have built a strong rapport in order to effectively educate and empower youth to become advocates of Carson City and the issues that surround them in our community. Kratom has become a topic that the youth of Carson City find to be a major emerging problem. With Kratom being readily available on the shelves of gas stations and many other stores that might attract youth, the accessibility is growing astronomically. Youth have reported directly to me that they are seeing more use of Kratom within their peers as another option to using opioids. While PCC respects the historical and traditional use of this herb, western tradition uses this substance as a recreational drug to fulfill and opiate like high that eventually becomes addictive. PCC strives to create a healthy community through prevention at this time the best course to take is prevention through the scheduling of Kratom. Thank you for your time and support on this matter.

JTNN Join Together Northern Nevada
Building Partnerships for a Healthy Community

July 8, 2020

Directors of the Nevada State Board of Pharmacy:

As the Executive Director of Join Together Northern Nevada (JTNN), a nonprofit substance abuse prevention coalition in Washoe County, I'd like to provide public comment on the potential scheduling of the drug mitragynine (kratom). JTNN facilitates conversations to address substance use issues in the community and monitors drug trends to provide timely education and awareness about drugs of abuse to parents, teachers, youth and other community members.

JTNN staff first became aware of youth and others abusing kratom in Washoe County five years ago. Our office began to get calls from parents about an herb their kids were using, and we started hearing from students that they were purchasing kratom at convenience stores and head shops with the intent of getting high. They had figured out how to use it as a sedative or a stimulant, depending on their desired effect, and they also discovered the drug wasn't appearing on drug screens. Around the same time, we began hearing from our treatment partners about their clients who were addicted to kratom, withdrawing from kratom, or relapsing by using kratom. In the last year, our partners at Washoe County's Alternative Sentencing reported noticing their probationers were acting like they were high, yet not testing positive for any drugs. They implemented a 14-panel drug test and found a high percentage of their probationers testing positive for kratom. Alternative Sentencing does not allow the use of kratom, and they're concerned by their probationers who are suffering withdrawal right alongside those who abuse prescription opioids or heroin.

As you most likely know, there have been multiple reports of deaths throughout the country of people who had ingested kratom, in most cases with other substances. The Washoe County Medical Examiner began tracking decedents whose tox screens included mitragynine (kratom) in 2019 and providing that data in quarterly reports for which opioid-related and methamphetamine-related deaths are also reported.

As a substance abuse prevention coalition, our staff stays abreast of trends in the community by conducting environmental scans relating to the marketing and sales of alcohol, marijuana, vaping devices, and other products sold in various retail establishments. Recently JTNN staff conducted an environmental scan at a few head shops as well as a kratom-only shop to learn how kratom was being marketed. The persona of the head shop staff was that of a medical professional giving advice of how to use kratom to get a desired effect which contrasted with the dark, somewhat gritty nature of the stores visited. The kratom-only establishment visited was clean and aesthetically pleasing. When walking into the store, JTNN staff were automatically transported into what feels like a health and wellness spa with a hint of matcha tea in the air. The establishment markets to the modern-day woman who needs something to take the edge off without any judgement. Upon greeting the customers, sales staff explain the amazing benefits of kratom from curing nausea, pain, and helping with sleep, to providing a "euphoric" feeling. During the visit JTNN staff asked several questions to which the answers are provided below.

- Question: Can kratom get you high? Sales person's answer: "No, it's natural so you don't get high, you just get a strong sense of euphoria." She said it's not possible to overdose on kratom, so keep taking it until you reach your "desired feeling." She said, "the worst thing that could happen is you get constipated or a little stomach pain."
- Question: Can I mix my anxiety medication with kratom? Sales person's answer: "You should talk to your doctor, but I take my anxiety medication and my pain medication for my back with my kratom and nothing bad has happened. "
- Question: How do you consume kratom and is it safe to take before or after work? Sales person's answer: "I take it everyday. You can mix it with coffee, put it in smoothies, or take it by the spoonful." She explained that even though kratom has sedative effects, users are still completely functional no matter what strain they use. She has taken kratom at work and is still able to assist the customers to her fullest ability and has driven under the influence of kratom and was completely fine.

I wanted to share this with you to give you an idea of how this drug is being marketed and sold in our community. JTNN staff concluded that shops like the ones mentioned above can be very harmful to average consumers who may not take the time to conduct their own research before being sold a drug that could potentially do harm through interactions with prescribed drugs.

It is JTNN's position that mitragynine (kratom) should be scheduled in the state of Nevada. From our interactions with youth, parents, treatment agencies, and Washoe County Alternative Sentencing, we have learned this is a drug being abused like other illicit drugs, and we do not believe it is safe for our community.

Sincerely,

Jennifer DeLett-Snyder

Fr: PACE Coalition
Elko, Nevada

PACE Coalition is a community coalition in Elko County, Nev., and member of the Nevada Statewide Coalition Partnership.

PACE Coalition supports the scheduling of kratom, mitragynine, and 7-hydroxymitragynine for the following reasons:

1. Kratom has no FDA-approved medical application in the United States.
2. Kratom and kratom-derived products sold in Nevada lack adequate quality controls and standards.
3. Kratom's action on opioid receptors gives it a high likelihood of producing dependency and addiction.
4. Kratom's interactions with other drugs are not well studied, whereas it has been linked to several deaths in combination with other substances.
5. Deaths from kratom use alone are documented.
6. Claimed benefits by kratom users and vendors are anecdotal and unsupported by controlled scientific trials.
7. Kratom products have been linked to salmonella outbreaks.
8. Unacceptable levels of some heavy metals have been found in some kratom products.
9. Kratom use has been linked to liver damage
10. Kratom's effects are dose dependent. Without adequate controls over potency, users are unable to reliably manage the effects from their use.
11. Kratom's efficacy as a treatment for opioid dependence and withdrawals is not clearly established.
12. Regular kratom users experience varying degrees of withdrawal symptoms.
13. Those who use kratom for its opioid-like euphoria may be drawn to other opioid use.

Many safer, evidence-based options exist for those coping with pain. Another unregulated substance with safety concerns makes it more likely that some will try to self-medicate or avoid proper medical care for pain-producing conditions. Public safety decreases when people without proper training or experience experiment with unproven drugs or combinations of drugs.

For these reasons, PACE Coalition, favors scheduling kratom and its derivatives or synthetic analogs.

Sincerely,

Laura L. Oslund, Executive Director
PACE Coalition

Dear Executive Secretary Wuest,

As one of the senior Medical Examiners and having served as Lead Medical Examiner at the Clark County Office of the Coroner/Medical Examiner, I provide autopsy and death investigation services for Clark County as well as autopsy services to Nye County, White Pine County, Lincoln County and Mohave County (Arizona). I also review fatalities as a member and Co-Chair of the Clark County Child Fatality Review Team. My Curriculum Vitae is attached.

I write to you today to express my concern regarding the danger of the currently unregulated and unscheduled drug mitragynine to Nevada residents. This plant-derived alkaloid compound also known as Kratom has historically been utilized in Southeast Asia for its stimulant-like effects at lower doses and opioid-like effects at higher doses. The drug has found its way to the western world, including Nevada, and apparently can be obtained with ease in concentrated extract form via the internet by its users.

Despite the lack of clinical research to determine the safety and efficacy of mitragynine, its use has become more widespread, and the number of mitragynine-related fatalities in Southern Nevada has increased alarmingly over the past 4 years after being first seen in 2016. The following data include the year and number of mitragynine related deaths identified in that year: 2016 – 1 death; 2017 – 2 deaths; 2018 – 2 deaths; 2019 – 10 deaths; and as of May 2020 – 8 deaths for a total of 23 mitragynine related deaths (of note, these data reflect cases in which the manner of death was either accident or suicide). Mitragynine concentrations ranged from 10 ng/mL to 4800 ng/mL in postmortem blood.

To date in the Southern Nevada deaths observed, mitragynine is most frequently observed in combination with other opioid and depressant drugs, both prescription and illicit. The combination with illicit drugs in particular suggests mitragynine is being used recreationally, as a drug of abuse, rather than in any therapeutic fashion. Its safety and efficacy have not been assessed, and the potency of the alkaloid in various plant extracts and powders is likely highly variable. Mitragynine (Kratom) presents a danger to Nevadans and should be designated schedule I, having no currently accepted medical use and a high potential for abuse.

Dave:

My apologies for the late communication on Agenda Item 31 C that is apparently going to be discussed at the ongoing meeting of the Board of Pharmacy.

I had not been aware of the discussion on this topic until this morning regarding the proposal for the Board to consider placing kratom's alkaloids on the Schedule I list in Nevada. The American Kratom Association would welcome the opportunity to have a discussion as early as possible on this issue because we believe the current and emerging science argues persuasively against this position. Similar efforts were undertaken in Arizona (that led to the passage of the Kratom Consumer Protection Act in that state), and in Ohio where the recommendation was withdrawn after extensive review of the issue.

As you know, Nevada also passed the KCPA last year.

I don't know if there is an opportunity to participation the meeting this morning remotely, but would be glad to join if that is possible.

In any event, we believe a policy discussion would help to inform you on the background of this issue.

I will stand by for your guidance.

Hello

As a Nevada resident and taxpayer I ask that the pharmacy board does not proceed with trying to ban kratom because it is relatively benign and provides a lot of help for a lot of people in tough situations. I have never experienced any danger from taking kratom, and I know many responsible adults who find it helpful. I have a friend who died from opiate overdose, and had I known he was taking opiates, and could go back in time, I bet kratom could have prevented him from overdosing. It's not only opiate addicts who can benefit, and I believe research and regulation would prove this to be true.

Thank you for your time.

Subject: Question and Remarks on Kratom.

Hello,

It's recently come to my attention that there seems to be some sort of push to ban kratom, by the Nevada Board of Pharmacy. Is this actually something that's being considered? Considering the KCPA and the many legal battles that have been one in the favor of the right to use kratom, I think this is an extremely short signed and terrible idea, with all due respect.

This is not a single demographic, either. There are tens of thousands of regular kratom users in Nevada. And hundreds of thousands that have tried it. The welfare of our state has not been harmed by it. It has, however, benefited in uncountable ways.

I say this with absolutely zero hyperbole. There will be blood on the hands of anyone pushing for a ban. This is a plain fact. I know these communities. I've worked with them. Seen the progress of people stopping more harmful drugs like heroin and excessive alcohol use. They've gone from homeless in some cases, to middle class taxpayers that follow the law. What do you think will happen when the rug gets pulled up from under them? It won't be suboxone or methadone. Many have already tried that and failed. Kratom allows them to work, to live their lives. For once. And taking that away would mean not only legal battles with the AKA and other groups against Nevada, but also lives shattered.

I can't believe this is being proposed in the Silver State. I've always taken pride in it being one of the most free states in the country. I know kratom users from 20 years old with anxiety and pain, to 80 year olds that don't want to use typical opioids from the doctor. I believe they all have the right to their body, just as you do, correct? I just want whoever is reading this to really think about what they're doing here. Numerous battles like this have been debated around the country, and they almost always come out with kratom on top, including reversals of laws, and lawmakers saying they didn't understand.

I'm sure you're receiving other mail about this. This is one of the very few letters I have written in this fashion, so I apologize if it's a little lengthy. But kratom is not some party substance. It's not like "spice" or "bath salts". Those things were rightly banned, as are the designer drugs on the list. But kratom has nothing to do with that. At all.

Please take this into consideration. The ramifications of this choice are very, very large. Lives are at stake.

Thank you for your time. Sincerely,

K. C.

Dear BOP members,

I am writing to you today to express my disappointment in your decision to try and make Kratom a schedule 1 narcotic. Myself and many I know have had this plant save their lives. Without it I don't know if I or my loved ones would be here today. Take the time to rethink your decision and listen to all of the people that Kratom has helped. I am afraid if a ban goes into existence many I know would go back down a dark path that Kratom had pulled them out from. Thank you for your time.

C. Amendment of Nevada Administrative Code (NAC) 453.510: Schedule I (Two active compounds in Kratom (Mitragyna speciosa korth)). The proposed amendment to NAC 453.510 will add Mitragynine (some trade or other names: methyl (E)-2-[(2S,3S,12bS)-3-ethyl-8-methoxy-1,2,3,4,6,7,12,12b-octahydroindolo[2,3-a]quinolizin-2-yl]-3-methoxyprop-2-enoate; αE,2S,3S,12bS)-3-ethyl-1,2,3,4,6,7,12,12b-octahydro-8-methoxy-α-(methoxymethylene)-indolo[2,3-a]quinolizine-2-acetic acid methyl ester; (E)-16,17-didehydro-9,17-dimethoxy-17,18-seco-20α-yohimban-16-carboxylic acid methyl ester; 9-methoxy Corynantheidine) and Hydroxymitragynine (some trade or other names: 7-hydroxymitragynine, (αE,2S,3S,7aS,12bS)-3-ethyl 1,2,3,4,6,7,7a,12b-octahydro-7a-hydroxy-8-methoxy-α-(methoxymethylene)-indolo[2,3-a]quinolizine-2-acetic acid methyl ester; 9-methoxycorynantheidine hydroxyindolenine; mitragynine hydroxyindolenine), to the list of controlled substances listed in Schedule I.

Mr. Wuest reported to the Board that the Crime Lab has seen an increase in Kratom related issues. He explained that the proposed amendment would make both components of Kratom a Schedule I drug.

Mr. Kandt read into the record the written public comment submitted by Laura Knight expressing support of the proposed language.

Mr. Dodge read into the record the written public comment submitted by Join Together Northern Nevada expressing support of the proposed language.

President Park opened Public Comment.

Jamie Ross, PACT Coalition, expressed concern related to community-based issues that revolve around the ease of access to Kratom. Mr. Ross expressed support of the proposed amendment.

Robert Vikre, PACT Coalition, expressed support of the proposed amendment. He explained that in his job as an addiction therapist he has observed many patients turning to Kratom as a way to self-treat opioid dependence.

Board Action:

Motion: Jade Jacobo moved to accept the proposed amendment and move forward to Public Hearing.

Second: Wayne Mitchell

Action: Passed unanimously.

Regarding 14th hearing on possible kratom ban

Mar 30, 2022, 6:45:29 AM

Hello, I wanted to send a comment regarding the hearing on a pending kratom ban in Nevada. Kratom is incredibly misunderstood and the American Kratom Association has a lot of great info to dispel the myths. I have personally used kratom for about 10 years in its natural powder form (which is just the leaves ground up) land t is very safe if used properly. I use it primarily for pain management, which is a much safer alternative to prescription pills and other opiates which kill thousands of Americans every year.

Anything can be abused, but if properly used it is a natural and safer alternative to prescription opiates which are a REAL epidemic in this country. The "kratom-related deaths" that have been reported (which are a TINY fraction compared to the opiate deaths every year) show in the toxicology reports that these individuals often have multiple substances in their system, which is never recommended for responsible kratom usage. But every day in this country there are thousands, maybe even tens of thousands, of people like myself who responsibly use kratom powder for pain management, anxiety relief and general sense of well-being. Banning it will just force these people to seek illegal alternatives like opiates which literally kill thousands of Americans every year.

Hi,
My name is Julie. I'd like to send my support for keeping Kratom legal.
As a community advancement supporter, it is pertinent that we do not take steps backwards.
Unfortunately, my father died of cancer. The quality of his life would have been better than anyone dying could have ever dreamed. Unfortunately, we where not aware of the benefits of kratom at that time. I wish I could have helped him... but now I can help others gain an astonishing quality of life. If nothing at all... at least promote the life changing benefits of kratom. Banning kratom is simply not the answer.

Thank you for your time,
Julie

I can't why anyone in their right mind would wish to see an all natural alternative to extremely dangerous and addictive pharmaceutical drugs banned!!! It's a plant for God's sake.... Like cannabis..... Hello... Unless y'all are being paid off by big Pharma... Seriously. Anecdotally Kratom has saved my life and countless countless countless others. I personally was on so Loft Percocet thirties and value. I am on none of those substances today thanks to Kratom and medicinal cannabis.

Your everyday individuals (citizens of Nevada) are dealing with depression anxiety and chronic pain all the way to our troops who served our country in our military that have PTSD and have had limbs blown off in battle. Why would you take away their choice to not take dangerous pharmaceutical substances that are highly addictive like percocet Oxycontin oxycodone all the other opiate pain relievers that caused massive addiction death overdose and cause people to become a street drug junkies when the prescriptions are pulled. Not to mention it works for anxiety so you don't have to take benzodiazepines like Xanax or Klonopin which are both again highly highly addictive extremely dangerous and cause death in overdosed situations. Now last I checked this is the United States of America no matter what state you live in it is the United States of America. In this country we are supposed to be able to have decisions to make, multiple different things to choose from.

I know a great many people that have switched to kratom for a regimented schedule in order to battle their chronic pain depression and or anxiety. They have chosen to not be zombified Pharmaceutical individuals. I personally have gotten countless people off of the dangerous Pharmaceuticals that doctors had prescribed. They did not need them. But they needed something to help them get off of these dangerous addictive drugs instead of other dangerous addictive drugs like Suboxone and Subutex. Which people are put on for life and they should only be used for a 3 to 5 day window to battle withdraw. No human being should be on Suboxone for life. Or methadone!!! That is big pharmaceutical companies sinking their vampire teeth into mainstream Society via people's primary care physicians. It's a fact it's not up for debate it's been proven over and over again.

Now let's tackle the topic of Kratom overdoses.😂 That statement is an oxymoron. You cannot overdose and die from Kratom alone. Every single overdose that has happened where Kratom is involved I'll bet my life multiple other substances were involved and they actually triggered and caused said overdose not the kratom. Kratom does not bind with the receptors in the brain that regulate breathing heart rate and other involuntary life-sustaining situations internally. They simply don't bind with those receptors so it is scientifically impossible for Kratom to cause an overdose where someone dies from either asphyxiation or heart attack which is what happens with all the other drugs I've listed here. If you have cannabis legal in any way whatsoever you must keep Kratom legal in at least the exact same capacity if not far more lenient. Just because you guys aren't making millions of dollars off of regulating Kratom doesn't mean you have to ban it. It means you're not making money off of it and oh golly G poor poor poor state of Nevada how they're not making money off of Kratom but yet they have legalized gambling Which is far more addictive and has ruined far

You guys have a major methamphetamine problem in that state you should focus on that instead of trying to ban a helpful natural alternative to harmful addictive pharmaceutical substances.
What you should do as you should attempt to spread more knowledge real scientific factual knowledge about Kratom not misinformation and propaganda put out by pharmaceutical companies. Legitimate information with scientific backing. So that people are informed and can make adult decisions which is what this country is founded upon. Please stop taking constitutional rights away from anybody ever by Banning substances any of them actually. Every time a substance is banned it makes the demand for it quadruple and then the black market is flooded with millions and millions of dollars for whatever product you guys band. You guys have not seen the pattern yet? If you haven't I think you guys need to go back to school. Because a third grader could see the pattern here. Go back and look at every single time any substance has ever been banned and look at the demand for it quadruple the day it is banned. So moving forward it is completely childish and unconstitutional to ban kratom in any way shape or form in your state or any other state in the United States of America for that matter. I think you guys need to start looking at scientific data not the lobbyist fat pockets. And if by some chance this reaches an actual politician, you're supposed to be in touch with the common man not rich lobbyists and pharmaceutical company CEOs and investors. Represent the common man that doesn't want to take dangerous pills and wants to use a natural plant as an alternative. And if you're a God-fearing individual stop trying to regulate or do anything to any natural plant and seeming to think that humans can do it better. God made cannabis God made Kratom stop thinking that you a fallible human being can make it better. It's here for a reason it's not here for you to control or band. It's here for humans to benefit from. Again that's a fact I hope you guys can see the truth of what I have said and I hope you guys make the right decision to let Kratom be a safer alternative to the dangerous pharmaceutical products that are being shoved down almost all Americans throat by the big pharmaceutical companies through their primary care physicians. Thank you for reading this have a fantastic day God bless

To whom it may concern,

I am a 59 year-old high school math teacher, mother of 4 , and grandmother of 11. I have a master's degree in my field. Eight years ago I experienced the most excruciating pain in my neck. After an MRI I was told I had Degenerative Disc Disease and it would never get completely healed. I did physical therapy for 2 years and took Tramadol, Flexeril, and different prescription anti-inflammatory drugs daily. I also took multiple rounds of medrol and prednisone and had injections including medial branch blocks every couple of months. My stomach was constantly upset and I was still in constant pain.

I did not want to take an actual opioid daily because I have to be able to be clear enough to teach precalculus. I researched for months, and found kratom. I stopped going to pain management, with their blessing, to try kratom and CBD. The CBD did not work for me, but the kratom did. I've taken kratom daily for 4 years. I've never been high, and my pain has been managed appropriately and effectively. I understand the kratom industry takes money away from the big pharmaceutical companies, and they have a lot of influence, but you would be doing the citizens of your state a grave disservice by banning this amazing plant from the coffee family. Please listen to me, and to other people who use kratom to increase their quality of life, and do not ban it. Instead, please regulate the industry so that consumers are protected from contaminated products.

Sincerely,
Jennifer Bartlett

Good morning,

I understand that there will be a public hearing about changing Kratom to a schedule one drug. This is one of the most silly things ever. You can tell that the people that want to do this have no idea what this is. After the Covid scam it is obvious that pharmaceuticals will ban anything that is helpful that they do not have going through their companies. Kratom is the most benign herb that helps with a plethora of symptoms. It does not cause you to get high or even feel out of control. The reports of people overdosing are obviously concocted for a narrative similar to the Rolling Stone story of all of the Ivermectin overdoses clogging the emergency rooms. You people are reprehensible and should be stopped as a public menace. Get serious for once in your life and quit pushing papers and actually help somebody. It might change your life for the good.

WARNING - This email originated from outside the State of Nevada. Exercise caution when opening attachments or clicking links, especially from unknown senders.

Good morning,

It is my understanding that this email address is where I may submit comments regarding the considered ban of Mitragyna Speciosà in Nevada. I would like to express my strong opposition to this ban.

Kratom is something that I have used for 3.5 years to provide relief from anxiety and to give me the peace of mind to pursue goals in my life. I am someone who does not react well to most prescription medications, so Kratom has been an excellent source of stress relief for me. It allows me to worry less, socialize more, and feel good about the choices I am making in my life.

In all of my time using Kratom, I have never faced any adverse effects from it, other than gastrointestinal discomfort one might also experience from coffee or spicy food. In fact, I have specifically had bloodwork done to see if Kratom had caused any problems that I might not be aware of. I am attaching a copy of my bloodwork below, so that any medical staff advising you on this ban may be aware of the effects that Kratom has had on my body. Keep in mind, this bloodwork is the result of three and a half years of daily use. In short, Kratom has not caused any harm to me, and my bloodwork shows that I am in excellent health.

I have seen Kratom on the chopping block many times, and it always brings about a lot of frustration in me. Those who wish to ban Kratom are the ones who have never tried it, do not know what it is, and cherry-pick cases where Kratom has caused problems for people and misconstrue those problems to be something other than what they truly are. I have seen Kratom considered for Schedule I in the past. That would place it on the same level of severity as heroin. This is absurd to me. I use Kratom every day and I am able to hold a stable job. Kratom has zero effect on my ability to function, aside from the fact that it IMPROVES my mood and sociability.

People who make these laws have no experience with Kratom and no idea what it actually does for a person. When you consider banning this supplement, listen to the advice of those who have real-world experience with it, rather than listening to the people who don't have any experience and only hear the scare-tactic stories about the plant.

Banning this plant would be a detriment to its users who have found great benefit from it. You would not be doing anyone a favor by pursuing this ban.

Mark Bartos

Hello,

I received word that there would be a public hearing regarding the use of kratom. I normally don't speak out but I wanted to say that kratom quite literally saved my life. I have been diagnosed with treating resistant depression and anxiety and with no medicine helping I turned to alcohol and became dependent. I lost my girlfriend, my friends, my job as a chemical engineer, and my relationship with my parents. After working to kick the alcohol I was still stuck with an inability to get out of bed from the depression and eventually got to the point where I didn't know what else to do. I tried kratom and it saved my life. It took the endless depression and anxiety off just enough where I felt normal. I didn't feel high or euphoric or anything, I just felt normal. Since then I was able to get a great job as a senior process engineer for a pharmaceutical company. I have a great girlfriend who I live with along with our golden retriever. I see my parents almost every week and have an amazing relationship with them. My friendships have flourished and although I still have low level anxiety and depression, it does not prohibit me from getting out of bed or functioning. If you take away kratom I really can't express the damage it would do to my life. To be honest it horrifies me. I have years of bloodwork with perfect results and no issues that have arisen from kratom use. Please do not ban kratom, I can't express how devastating that would be and I don't want to think about where I'd be.

Thank you for listening,

Brad

To whom it may concern,
I am writing to you today to implore
you to reconsider your stance on Kratom.
I suffer from chronic pain. I am 40 years old and just received my second hip replacement. I also have two herniated disks in my cervical spine. I suffer from pain every day from the moment I wake up. The only respite I have is Kratom. My doctors have tried prescribing me opiates for over a decade. I hate them. They may take the edge off the pain, but they make me feel sick and I'm unable to work while on them. Not to mention the likelihood of addiction. I've tried tramadol and it put me in the hospital with a seizure.

Kratom gives me relief from my pain with out feeling high. Because of Kratom I am able to work my job that requires being on my feet all day and helps put food on the table for my son.

I am not a drug addict. Please don't treat me like one. I am a regular mom working full time who suffers from chronic pain and Kratom is the only thing that helps. If states start putting a ban on Kratom I will likely have to start taking opiates, please dont push me towards a drug that has reaped so much havoc on our country.

Sincerely

Please take into consideration the increasing number of Americans -- myself included -- who are chronic pain sufferers who have finally found a safe, effective way to take the edge off of severe pain without prescription opioids and constant visits to pain clinics. This increasing demonization of what for many are the only effective pain-management techniques is sending more and more chronic pain sufferers (I've had a severe case of AS for two decades) toward street drugs increasingly laced with fentanyl. And no, I don't feel good taking a scoop of kratom every four hours. I am able to work.

Dear Sir or Madam,

I've been taking kratom for years; it helps me in many ways physically and mentally. It is ridiculous that they are thinking of regulating kratom other than it being over the counter as other herbs and vitamins are. When is regulation going to stop excessively in government, this being the pharmaceutical sector, which will negatively affect the health and well-being of the common public.

Kindly vote against this proposition for the State of NV at the April meeting. This is America for goodness sakes ... freedom !

To whom it may concern,
As someone who has suffered with chronic pain and depression from non-progressive/slow progression avascular necrosis in my femoral head from an injury and PTSD. I have found tremendous success with kratom and would feel like I was starting over or severely set back in my life if it was made illicit.
I was diagnosed with PTSD at 27, and AVN at 32. I had developed agoraphobia with panic disorder from the PTSD and stopped leaving my home until intensive therapy. While working with a trauma specialist and psychiatrist to find something to give me my life back I ended up making progress in therapy, but I couldn't shake the depression completely. My life felt blunted and meaningless many days. Then came the AVN diagnosis and my depression came back to the pre-therapy levels. I was telling my therapist in weekly session's that I didn't know what to do and was terrified of going towards pain management knowing that addiction is real and has killed many people I know. I was talking with 2 wounded veterans I am friends with on separate occasions and they both mentioned kratom had helped them. I did a few months of research on what it was while still on crutches or a cane, miserable with my life. I discussed with my therapist (previously worked in addiction therapy before speculaizing in trauma patients) said she would want to monitor me if I had chose to try managing my pain with kratom after she did research as well. Fast forward 9 months of weekly 2 hour sessions and she was extremely impressed that my dose had not been growing weekly or even monthly, my depression was nearly gone and I was actually finding positives in my sessions. She actually wrote letters in against banning kratom after seeing my progress in 2016.
In the following year I ended up starting my own business and doing contract work in high threat medical training. In this same year I was walking unassisted, growing my business and traveling to multiple states in a month. Had you asked me 2 years before would that have ever happened I would have said absolutely no way. Agoraphobia made even a 15 min drive to therapy year 1 extreme difficult.

I know kratom is not responsible for all of this but walking without any aids and being able to start a business I can 100% say is with the help of kratom. While this is anecdotal evidence,I will say that I know myself and others who had a profound effect from kratom. Friends who have been severely injured in combat and thought life would never be the same. 2 of them now have business's, went off disability and have purpose in life again. Both credit not being in blinding pain or hooked on opiate pain medication daily which both had been in the past and it nearly ruined their lives. Both had reservations about kratom and even took time off from taking it to make sure it wasn't going to be horrible withdrawals and depression. Both quit for 1 month and 2 months respectively and neither had anything more than a runny nose, tired and pain returning to their injuries.

If you ban this plant you will be responsible for more people going towards pain medications and the severe addiction we all know comes with it. Kratom has a self regulation effect in ground form. No one I know who took or takes it keeps taking more and more to try to get high or some euphoria. I believe as well as my therapist and M.D.s I talk to about this, removing kratom from the toolbox for the average person will result in deaths.

Kindly take my story into consideration and please think about all those like myself who you will never hear about but because we are not abusing this plant, we have businesses and just want to be left alone. Please do not let the small number of irresponsible people take away a highly beneficial plant for everyone. Thank you for your time.

I am writing this email to voice my objection to the Kratom ban. Kratom is natural supplement that helps relieve many ailments in the body. The only reason for the attempted ban is because pharmacy companies are losing money from people being able to deal with pain naturally. This is fundamentally and morally wrong. This is a direct threat and violation to American health and needs to be stopped.

I'm reaching out because I have been made aware that there is an upcoming hearing to ban the sale of Kratom in NV.

I am writing from experience being that my loved one was addicted to meth for years and turned to lying and stealing to feed his habit. Which also led to jail time and stays at rehab multiple times.

The last stay in rehab, after a 6 month stay in prison, he cleaned himself up and found Kratom extremely helpful in keeping him clean and on the right track. Its been 2 years since he became a free man from jail and addiction. He has held the same job and remains clean to this day.

He lives with me and has since his release from rehab. He is a different person and back to the brother I remember prior to his addiction. He functions as a normal member of society, earns and pays his own way. He has rebuilt his life and even quit smoking through this process.

I would hate to have this harmless product taken from him when it seems its what has drastically helped him to take control of his life.

-He is not angry, but even tempered.
-He is not withdrawn, but now able to carryon conversations and have relationships with others.
-He is not out committing crimes, but a working, tax paying citizen.
-He is not living on the streets, but renting his own space and never been late on payment.
-He is no longer going hungry, but makes enough to buy his own groceries and order out.

As you can see, Kratom has made a world of difference for my Brother. He has come back to life and is a survivor from something most do not come back from.

Please consider others like my brother who use this product and have been able to turn their lives around and those who this keeps them from turning to a life of addiction and crime.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Dear reader,

I am writing to express my feelings and stance on the kratom ban.

\I injured my back (torn ligament L1- S2) in 2005 (I was 25yr old) and became addicted to oxycontin which led to a 10yr disaster which ended with a full blown addiction to heroin. Somehow I stayed away from intravenous use however I used everyday all day through my nose. I lost everything. I am a college educated and highly successful IT Manager and have worked for Microsoft, Xerox, Ingredion and Celgene Bio-Pharmaceuticals. I finally went to rehab and got clean in 2015 and haven't used since. Part of what keeps me going and also controls the pain WAY better than tylenol or OTC pain meds is Kratom. We need to understand more about Kratom at the federal level before we start putting bans in place. The damage to those of us who have recovered from drug addiction and need Kratom to continue to control pain could be catastrophic to an already opioid saturated culture.

Please consider this ban as destructive.

Thank you,

Greetings. I want to express my thoughts and feelings about your proposed Kratom ban in the state of Nevada. I think it is downright ignorant of you people to even propose such a thing. Do you have any idea about how many people are being helped by this medicinal plant? Do your due diligence and you will find that many people are finding real relief from severe pain without having to use dangerous pharmaceuticals, or are even getting off of those dangerous and deadly pills with the help of Kratom. Kratom also is helping many alcoholics and drug addicts wean off of their drugs and achieve sobriety.

Kratom is not a dangerous plant and there is no real evidence to prove that it is. In fact, it is in the same family as the coffee bean. And at the end of the day, don't knock it til you've tried it. If the state of Nevada embraces Kratom instead of banning it, it can only mean good things for the good people of Nevada. If you care about the citizens of Nevada, don't ban this medicine.

So please, I encourage you to do some real research and interview people who have been helped by it. So many peoples lives have been changed for the better because of this medicine. Don't let anyone fool you. Again, I reiterate; Be Wise and Do Your Own Research.

Thank you.

Before I found kratom I had not had a good night sleep for about 25 years I have taken a whole box of sleeping pills one night 2-3 at a time spread out every 3-4 hours still could not sleep. Then about 5 years ago I developed a VERY bad case of restless leg. Again No Doctor could help. Kratom is the only thing that works for me. Please do not ban Kratom. I don't know what I would do without it. It has been a life saver for me. Thank You, Mark

The Nevada State Board of Pharmacy-

It has come to my attention that you will be holding a hearing to consider whether or not to ban kratom.

I am writing to show my support for kratom and hope that you reconsider your motives. I hope that your initiatives are based on science and evidence, and not merely a claim or from funding you receive through lobbying.

Kratom has helped the lives of many fight other more serious addictions.

Banning kratom would be devastating to many businesses and livelihoods in your area. All for what?

If anything, why not dedicate more time and resources to studying how kratom has helped the lives of many and it's potential effects.

Hello,

My name is Skyler DiMurro-Scheere. I live in Arizona, but the pending kratom ban in Nevada would deeply affect me. Arizona has adopted the Kratom Consumer Protection Act, which prevents anyone under the age of 21 to buy kratom, and requires kratom vendors to validate that there are no adulterants in their products.

I started using kratom 5 years ago for a variety of reasons and it has greatly improved my way of life. I'm part of the supportive and active community of kratom users, I'm part of my own community, part of my son's school, I have an excellent job in software development, I pay my taxes, I'm a law abiding citizen, and I'm concerned about Nevada's pending ban.

The vendor I purchase kratom from is in Nevada. Over the years, I've developed a trusting relationship with Mitragaia and it would be devastating for me and others if this ban went through. I'm sure you are aware that there is a lot of false information surrounding kratom, and it would be a shame if it were banned.

I urge Nevada lawmakers and the Nevada Board of Pharmacy to reconsider a ban and instead adopt the KCPA like so many other states have. As a kratom consumer, I feel like I can take kratom safely because of it.

Thank you,

As one of the millions of responsible Kratom users I ask you not to ban it from sale or possession in Nevada. It has changed my life and I am arthritis pain free because of it. If Nevada bans it, I will not be able to travel there to vacation and ski. Regulate it, tax it, do whatever you need to do, but please do not ban it.

To whom it may concern;

I want to let you know my experience with Kratom. 4 years ago I began taking small doses of Kratom for Anxiety. I had tried prescription medications and they either made me feel listless or like a zombie, a poor reflection of the person I was. Immediately I saw the benefits. I was more productive at work, more calm during the day without feeling "buzzed", more oriented to working with my fellow workers. I had begun to enjoy life once more. Later I noticed that I could do physical labor for longer and without pain I had experienced my entire life. I have an artificial hip and two artificial knees and still experienced back and shoulder pain. My right shoulder was injured years ago and it tore a tendon that is not repairable. I have been in near constant pain from it. I noticed after beginning Kratom, less pain, more flexibility. You may say its just the placebo effect, it may be. Either way, I'm happier, under less stress, able to work, move and enjoy life in a manner I thought was gone for me. Kratom did this.
I take yearly physicals with blood work and have seen no negative effects.
After I had been taking it for about a year I met a young man who had been a heroin addict. He had been addicted for 4 years and had lost his wife, family, job and unfortunately the will to live. He related his experience of using Kratom and having the cravings for heroin diminish. He saw light at the end of the tunnel and sought help. He entered treatment and has been in recovery for 2 years now. He said without Kratom he is not sure he would have taken the step toward regaining his life.
I beg you to let people have access to this plant, I have seen the benefits. If you will only look you will too. Prescription drugs are allowed on the market that have proven deadly side effects, because they help some people. I have never heard of an overdose of Kratom that wasn't laced with some other material like fentanyl. It would have been deadly without the Kratom, so don't blame this plant for that death.
Please don't rob your citizens of this aid to living a better life.

Dear Sirs:
I am a 62 year old former VA RN and I have osteoarthritis, as well as anxiety. Kratom has been Vital to my relief from pain and ability to sleep at night. Please do not make this very helpful plant inaccessible to the many many people who are helped by Kratom.!
Making it a controlled substance is unnecessary and almost punitive to those of us who are disabled and thus impoverished.
This very helpful plant is used only as needed. Since continuing to function helps with arthritis, the unfettered access to Kratom is a great benefit to me and many thousands of others. It has been used for untold years in Asia and should remain a medicinal herb available to all who need it!
Thank you so much for hearing me!
Doris Long
